Fisheries Act ruling greeted with anger

Environmental spokesmen have reacted with anger and bitterness to a Supreme Court of Canada ruling Tuesday against a section of the Fisheries Act which restricts logging activities.

The court ruled in an unanimous judgment Tuesday that the section of the legislation — which places a blanket prohibition on logging operations in waters frequented by fish — is beyond the powers of Parliament.

The judgment said Parliament had intruded onto provincial jurisdiction contrary to the British North America Act, the country's constitution.

Eve Howden, a Victoria spokesman for the Sierra Club of B.C. said today the decision by the court is the worst setback fisheries protection has suffered since the new fisheries act was proclaimed.

"It's a sad case indeed when the courts continue to refuse to support legislative protection for our natural resources and environment in general," Howden said.

Howard English, fisheries advisor for the B.C. Wildlife Federation, said that the province has lost half its salmon production, in great part due to the impact of industries such as logging.

"Fish production doesn't receive adequate protection from the detrimental impact of other industries," English said.

The decision, he added, is just another indication of the federal and provincial governments' inability to sort out questions of jurisdiction.

"Fisheries comes under federal jurisdiction, logging comes under provincial jurisdiction and the resources suffer," English said.

But Forests Minister Tom Waterland hailed the court ruling as a good decision because it forces recognition of more than one resource value.

Fisheries spokesmen say the decision is another blow to an already floundering industry which needs legislation to encourage the forest industry to minimize debris.

However, forest industry officials have said it is virtually impossible to log in B.C. without violating the contended section of the legislation.

In making the ruling, the court erased a conviction against Dan Fowler who was charged with unlawfully putting debris into waters at or near B.C.'s Forbes Bay, while engaged in logging.

A verdict of guilty was imposed by a County Court judge. The B.C. Court of Appeal agreed he was guilty.

And Don Lanskail, president of the Council of Forest Industries, which helped pay for Fowler's appeal, said he hopes the real benefit of the judgment will arise in the form of an opportunity to discuss and negotiate sensibly regulations and guidelines so that logging and fishing can co-exist in a positive atmosphere.

Government lawyers argued in the Supreme Court that the section of the Fisheries Act was necessary as preventive legislation intended for the federal duty to preserve and protect fish.

They said that its validity did not depend on showing that the operations to which it related caused actual harm to a fishery.

Mr. Justice Ronald Martland, writing reasons for the Supreme Court, said the section covered a wide field of logging activities and the amount of substance deposited in the water didn't matter.

Richard Long with heady commercial

No headway in bare market

VANCOUVER (CP) — Richard Long just can't seem to get a head.

He's looking for a few "Grade-A baldies" willing to turn their hairless expanses into human billboards, but he's not having much luck.

The idea is simple. Long wants to recruit bald men who will allow him to silkscreen an advertisement on their heads for two weeks. Long will then hustle the space to advertisers.

The baldies get $150 each and Long gets whatever the market will bear.

There's no standing around street corners or walking up and down sidewalks. Once festooned with the commercial message, the men go about their business as usual.

But so far only two men who have answered Long's newspaper ads have agreed with the plan. If more willing baldies don't show up soon, Long's company will be in trouble.

"I don't know what the problem is," he said. "I guess bald men in Vancouver don't have much commitment. They could even wear hats."

Many of the men who have called so far assumed he was looking for people to model toupees, Long said. The rest thought he was crazy.

"Some I even had to turn down because they had too much hair."

Long isn't fooling himself that his heady advertising scheme will be a long-term business. "It's a novelty. I can only see it lasting for a year, then on to stomachs, arms . . .

$150M a mile for link?

An 11-mile floating bridge linking Vancouver Island with the mainland could be built for between $100 million and $150 million a mile, Science Minister Pat McGeer said Tuesday.

McGeer, who is awaiting a study on the feasibility of such a structure, said he was encouraged by the engineering data he saw during a trip last week to the Seattle area where a floating bridge is being constructed across Hood Canal.

The initial structure — designed by highways ministry engineers — was destroyed by a severe storm two years ago and is being replaced by a new structure estimated to cost about $100 million a mile, McGeer said.

"I don't know that we could duplicate as cheaply something across the Strait of Georgia but I would think maybe not as much as $150 million a mile," McGeer said.

"Then we have to do approaches on either side, so that the total cost would certainly be more than a billion dollars, but it would be, if this kind of structure is built, far less than the $3 to $5 billion some people have been talking about."

McGeer said the Hood Canal gap is much shorter than the distance across Georgia Strait, but the distance in which a wind storm could build up is similar, giving engineers a good idea of what sort of wave conditions might be faced.

A final report of the government's $100,000 pre-feasibility study into a transportation link across Georgia Strait is expected at the end of the month.

Meanwhile, McGeer said he thinks the most attractive route across the strait would be one from Stevesston, south of Richmond, to Valdes Island near Nanaimo.

A highway would then carry traffic to the northern tip of the uninhabited island, connect by bridge to the southern part of Gabriola Island and then across to Vancouver Island just south of Nanaimo by way of two small bridges.

McGeer said he thinks Gabriola Island residents — who have voiced objections to any changes to their scenic retreat — would find such a plan more attractive than to have part of the island blacktopped for an enormous ferry terminal.

Gabriola has been suggested as a likely site for a ferry terminal.

Death toll climbs in S. Africa riots

Burning roadblock halts motorist in Cape Town's black township of Manenberg

Times News Services

CAPE TOWN — Police armed with "shoot to kill" orders moved into riot-torn townships today to disperse youths stoning cars and burning shops in South Africa's worst racial outbreaks since 1976.

To back up the action, authorities rushed two planeloads of riot police from other regions to help quell the violence as it entered its second day.

The newspaper Cape Argus quoted hospital sources as reporting 36 dead and 200 wounded in Tuesday's riots.

Police Minister Louis le Grange placed the official toll at 11 dead, but the national news agency said this figure did not include three people who later died of wounds.

Le Grange blamed the riots on "violent hooligans" and chief aide, Gen. Mike Geldenhuys, gave orders to shoot to kill looters and arsonists.

"We are no longer dealing with school, meat or bus boycotters," Le Grange said. "We are concerned now with criminal violence, hooligan elements, and we will act relentlessly against them."

Violence broke out anew at mid-morning in two mixed-race townships as firefighters battled blazes that had burned out of control through the night.

Youths gathering in the streets stoned passing cars and shops that opened for business. At least two stores went up in flames before police restored calm with gunfire and tear-gas without causing new casualties.

The road to Cape Town's D. F. Malan Airport was strewn with burning tires, makeshift wooden barricades and rocks as bands of youths stoned passing motorists.

The South African Press Association (SAPA), quoting the Afrikaans-language newspaper Die Burger, said at least eight persons were killed and about 50 wounded in clashes with police in the mixed-race townships. But SAPA said an official source told the Cape Times "that he believed well over 15 people had died in the shooting in a number of separate incidents."

SAPA, the country's domestic news agency, said all official channels to sources of information about the number of people killed or wounded in the unrest were later closed off to the press on police instructions. The police directorate issued a ban Monday night on journalists entering "troubled" areas without special police permission.

Meanwhile, the Dutch parliament, defying the government, today voted overwhelmingly in favor of a unilateral oil boycott of South Africa because of that nation's apartheid policy.

Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw said an oil embargo would harm South Africa's black majority.

Police serve strike notice as prod — not ultimatum

By MIKE HUGHES

Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt policemen today served 72-hour strike notice.

However, a police spokesman said the move was more of a prod to get negotiations going again rather than an indication of an imminent walkout.

Provincial mediator Bob Almgren is still involved in the contract dispute and the Labor Code prohibits any strike action until he withdraws.

The 72-hour notice follows strike votes Tuesday. Policemen from the three forces voted by more than 90 per cent to walk off the job in support of their contract demands.

While issuing the strike notice, the policemen informed their respective municipal officials that emergency services will be maintained at all times.

Although the 115 members of the Saanich force have been involved in the overall negotiations, they are not included in the strike notice because they are covered by a collective agreement until Dec. 31.

Contracts for the other policemen expired at the end of 1979.

The four forces are negotiating for the first time this year with the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association rather than with their own police boards.

After talks broke down at one stage, the B.C. Federation of Labor agreed to have three members of its staff work with the policemen.

Federation secretary Dave MacIntyre, who has been acting as chief negotiator, said today the strike vote is a clear indication of the policemen's displeasure with the manner in which negotiations with the GVLRA have been conducted.

He said he hopes the strike notice will encourage the employer to sit down and settle an agreement through the free collective-bargaining process.

He said negotiations to date have been extremely frustrating:

"Very few items have been settled and of those items, some are provisions which were in past collective agreements."

Man dead in cell

A 43-year-old man died overnight in the city police station drunk tank.

His body was found at 5 a.m. today when a jailer went to release him.

The dead man's identity is being withheld until next of kin are located.

The man, described by police as a regular, was found unconscious on the Yates Street parkade's fourth floor around 5 p.m. Tuesday.

He was taken to Victoria General Hospital and admitted around 5:30 p.m.

Police lab reports indicate the man had a blood alcohol level of .255 as well as some barbiturates in his system.

At 8:30 p.m., a hospital official phoned police who picked up the man, who was able to walk but was still intoxicated.

Police said he was placed in the drunk tank with two other persons shortly before 9 p.m.

The cells were checked regularly through the night but by 5 a.m. the man had died.

Insp. Doug Grant said nothing is known about the dead man's background.

Ferry to take bicycles

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Changes are being made to permit bicycles aboard the Victoria Princess ferry to Seattle, B.C. Steamship Co. manager David Price said today.

Local cyclists have complained the new ferry doesn't allow bicycles, while the old Princess Marguerite used to carry hundreds of bikers back and forth every summer.

Price said bicycle racks are being built for the unused car deck on the Princess and special tickets should be ready in a few days.

It will cost a cyclist another $2 each way to take his machine to Seattle, on top of the regular $25 round trip fare.

He expects the first bicycles will be aboard the Victoria Princess early next week. One problem remains — separating foot passengers from bicycles in the congested dockside boarding areas at Victoria and Seattle.

Price wonders how foot passengers and cyclists will mix when getting off the ferry.

"There may be a few banged shins," he said.

One of the reasons B.C. Steamship hasn't been able to carry bicycles before now is congestion.

The company has something new to deal with this year, simultaneous disembarkation and boarding of passengers within a half-hour turnaround time, and the congestion is considerable.

Bicycles couldn't be carried from the Victoria end until now because there was only one facility to accommodate passengers waiting to board and it wasn't big enough.

A second temporary tent-like structure should be finished today, he said, allowing separation of tourists waiting to board for Seattle and those just arriving from the U.S. city.

Satellite mail now a reality

LONDON (AP) — The Post Office claimed a world first Tuesday when it transmitted a photo-copied letter via satellite from London to Toronto in slightly more than one minute.

It is the first transmission in a new service called Intelpost through which documents, plans and designs can be reproduced and sent via satellite across the Atlantic.

The Post Office said it is the first such service in the world, initially available only in London and Toronto.

Not as fast as a telephone or telex call, the international facsimile service is designed for customers who want to send complicated documents long distances.

It will take as little as three hours from the time documents are handed in for transmission to their collection at the other end, the Post Office said.

Because of the time difference — Toronto is five hours behind London — an item sent at 5 p.m. from the London Stock Exchange Post Office, one of the three London post offices initially offering the service, can be copied and available at 3 p.m. EDT in Toronto the same day.

A postal operator inserts the documents into a scanning machine that photographs them in black and white before transmitting them in digital form via satellite.

The service costs £4 ($10.75) for the first sheet and £2 ($5.38) for each additional sheet. There is an extra charge of £1 ($2.69) if special delivery is required.

Post Office officials said Intelpost may soon be extended to the Netherlands and the Far East.

In Toronto, Larry Sperling, Canada Post's assistant deputy postmaster-general, said if the new service becomes popular, the post office will probably lower its rates.

He estimated that Intelpost will break even in the first year of operation, surpassing $1 million in sales.

By the end of the summer, the satellite service will be available from Toronto, Washington and New York City. In the fall, Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Montreal and Halifax will be included in the service.

Documents can be as small as 127 mm by 127 mm (five inches by five inches) and not larger than 216 mm by 356 mm (8½ inches by 14 inches).

Wives will sleep over with jailed husbands

OTTAWA (CP) — Correctional Commissioner Donald Yeomans said today wives will be allowed to sleep with husbands doing long-term sentences in a pilot project to be carried out at an unnamed federal prison.

If the project is successful, Yeomans said in an interview, conjugal visits may become a part of life at perhaps a dozen prisons within several years.

The project would entail two-day visits in which a prisoner would join his family in a mobile home or two-bedroom cottage within the prison walls.

Yeomans said a test of public opinion in the last year has uncovered no strong feelings either way about such visits.

Prison officials have studied similar programs in Saskatchewan and the United States. The pilot project would be under way by the end of this year, he said.

51% back Pierre: Gallup

MONTREAL (CP) — A Gallup poll released today indicates that 51 per cent of Canadians are satisfied with the performance of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau since last February's federal election.

The poll, based on 1,042 personal, in-home interviews conducted with adults aged 18 years and over in early May, indicates that 39 per cent of Canadians are dissatisfied with Trudeau, while nine per cent are undecided.

Satisfaction with the prime minister is higher east of the Manitoba-Ontario border than it is west.

The poll also indicates that 46 per cent of Canadians do not believe Joe Clark has been a good leader of his party since the federal election.

Police strike notice

pute has been the standardization of the forces' contracts.

MacIntyre said the policemen are quite prepared to negotiate a standard agreement but not on the basis of using the lowest common denominator from all the contracts.

Earlier in the week, GVLRA manager Carl Anshelm released copies of an analysis of existing contracts and the GVLRA's proposals.

He said the association's offers are identical to the provisions contained in the 1980 agreement for Vancouver policemen.

The only exceptions, he said, are the continuation of the compressed work week, as compared to the five-day week in Vancouver, and the second-year term tying the salaries for the two areas.

Anselm said today he is surprised by the policemen's latest action.

"Ordinarily, when strike action is threatened, the areas of dispute have been clearly defined," he said.

"But here, those areas have not been defined."

The policemen have not indicated any specific items they take issue with, he said, nor have they even made a proposal on wages:

"I just don't comprehend their procedure."

Meanwhile, Labor Minister Jack Heinrich said today he is not alarmed by the policemen's strike notice.

They are proceeding in a legal manner, he said, roughly equivalent to the action taken earlier this year by their Vancouver counterparts.

The minister said he doesn't expect a strike to occur.

Gov't and union both happy with pension meeting

Both sides were non-committal following a meeting Tuesday to discuss the B.C. government's controversial public service pension amendments.

Norm Richards, president of the B.C. Government Employees Union, said he was happy with the meeting in Victoria with Premier Bill Bennett and Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe.

Wolfe also described the hour-long meeting as a good one.

The union has been demanding the Social Credit government withdraw amendments to limit inflation indexing of public service pensions and increase workers' contributions to the pension funds.

It is not clear whether there will be further meetings on the pension issue, however, Wolfe said there may be developments after Thursday's regular weekly cabinet meeting.

The government union and the B.C. Federation of Labor have been conducting protest rallies throughout the province to protest against Bill 28, the proposed changes to pension legislation.

Union leaders say the changes are being made unilaterally for political reasons, while the government says the changes are necessary to ensure the pension fund's long-term stability.

RICHARDS . . . non-committal

Meanwhile, the government has extended its campaign against inflation-proof pension plans by asking B.C. Hydro to curb pension benefits for the Crown utility's 9,000 workers.

Energy Minister Bob McClelland; minister responsible for B.C. Hydro, confirmed Tuesday the government has asked Hydro's board of directors to eliminate open-ended pension indexing. The matter is expected to be discussed at a board meeting later this month.

A spokesman for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which represents several hundred Hydro workers, immediately branded the government's proposal a dirty trick.

"It's completely dirty pool," said a surprised Rick Dowling, assistant financial secretary for IBEW Local 213.

Hydro chairman Robert Bonner refused comment on the pension limitation demand or even acknowledge he has heard about it.

However, Universities Minister Pat McGeer, who is also a Hydro director, said, everyone in the province has to be treated alike regardless of employer.

The Hydro pension scheme, according to Crown corporation actuaries, is in much better shape than the plans administered by the B.C. government on behalf of its 41,000 public servants, 57,000 B.C. municipal employees and 41,000 teachers.

The government can, under the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority Act, alter pension provisions for Hydro employees but did not include a change to that act in last month's amendments.

After the public service pension amendments were introduced in May, Wolfe and McClelland both said they had not discussed changes to Hydro's pension arrangement.

This prompted allegations that Hydro workers and executives were being given special treatment.

Uranium mining safe says outside study

VANCOUVER (CP) — A study done for the Royal commission on uranium mining in B.C. indicates uranium operations in B.C. are unlikely to create excessive environmental contamination.

The $50,000 study, carried out at the request of the commission by the Battelle Memorial Institute in Richland, Wash., says if liquid wastes are treated to remove heavy metals and radioactive material, there should be no case where average exposures exceed protection guidelines.

Untreated wastes, however, could lead to excessive exposure in some cases, the report concludes.

Described by royal commission chairman Dr. David Bates as "the major outside commission study," the Battelle project consisted of detailed computer calculations of the levels of contamination that could be expected in air, water and foodstuffs from mining and milling operations at three B.C. sites.

"Conservative" estimates were made of poorly known factors such as the rate at which animals accumulate pollutants in their tissues and of variable ones such as the concentration of radioactivity in watercourses, say the Battelle researchers, so calculated exposures would err on the high side.

The study was received by the commission after the provincial government declared a seven-year moratorium on uranium mining and shut down the commission's public hearings, so its authors have not been subjected to cross-examination.

In no case would retention in humans match or exceed estimated toxic thresholds, nor would fish in effluent-carrying streams be subjected to fatal levels of heavy metals, the study said.

However, untreated wastes could result in vegetation contaminated to maximum recommended levels.

Municipal borrower's credit rating up

B.C.'s chief borrowing agency for municipalities — the Municipal Finance Authority — has had its bond rating upgraded to a top-rated triple A by Moody's Investors Services of New York.

The rating, similar to the one given last month to the province and B.C. Hydro, will result in lower interest costs on future borrowings for B.C.'s municipalities and regional districts, said Jim Stuart, a Kelowna alderman and chairman of the authority.

Juvenile law changes urged

The greatest problem in trying to control juvenile prostitution is inadequate federal legislation; Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy said Tuesday.

McCarthy said her ministry could do several things to try to solve the growing juvenile prostitution problem, but the matter really lies with Ottawa.

A interim report prepared for the ministry by Ted Oliver, a former deputy chief of police, has identified close to 300 juvenile prostitutes in Vancouver's West End area.

McCarthy said Oliver recommends putting a hostel in the area and increasing the number of streetworkers.

"The city police have already put more staff on and the patrol car has been put back on again in the last two weeks," she said.

McCarthy said, however, the real answer lies in changes to legislation governing juveniles — a federal jurisdiction.

Recent court challenges have resulted in the throwing out of legislation which had previously controlled the problem, she said.

"Our hands are very much tied in this regard," McCarthy said. "We must have federal co-operation."

Angry Chinese groups post reward in murder

VANCOUVER (CP) — Anger in the Chinese community over the June 3 sex-slaying of a Vancouver woman in Duncan, B.C. had led to a $26,000 reward offer.

"We haven't even begun asking for pledges or donations," Jack Say Yee said at a news conference Tuesday to announce the reward for information leading to a conviction in the death of Suzanna Seto, 29.

Yee said the money was from individuals, service clubs, the victim's family and Vancouver business organizations.

"The people coming forward are venting anger as well as concern," he said. The reward gives them a way to help.

Constable Hal Zach of Duncan RCMP said the reward could help. "We can use any assistance from the public we can get."

Seto, a land-use consultant, was in Duncan to inspect property for a client at the time of her death.

RCMP said her nude body was found near the motel where she had been staying the day after she arrived.

Police said she was slain in her room by a blow to the head from a heavy object and then taken into the brush about 50 metres away.

An autopsy showed she was sexually molested before being killed. But police said Tuesday no motive has been established in the slaying and there were no suspects.

Gambling on coal

The B.C. government stopped playing poker with Ottawa this weekend.

Announcing boldly that it will take on itself the job of building a spur railway to open the northeastern coalfields to Japanese export markets.

So far, so good though the government may be taking the biggest economic development gamble in its five-year history. Working essentially alone, can it convince Japanese steel firms to pay the prices for northeastern coal that will allow the project to [illegible]n?

[illegible]lternatively, can it con[illegible] people of B.C. that a long-term subsidy of the coal project is only a sophisticated version of a Winter Works program, well-justified by the thousands of the jobs that will be created in the north?

The stakes are high, both politically and economically. The Social Credit government was elected five years ago on a promise to get B.C.'s economy moving again. That really hasn't happened, though no one could reasonably blame the government in these years of lumber slumps and world-wide recessions.

Bennett and his cohorts, however, still hold a dream of returning to the glorious boom days of the '60s, a vision of northern development and prosperity. The northeastern coal project is the best way they can see to make that dream a reality.

That is why Bennett talks about the coal developments in the same breath as the famed Two-Rivers Policy of his father, tries to rekindle the idea of provincial greatness with the visions of new railroads, highways, ports and towns being carved out of the coal-rich wilderness.

It could work. If a suitable agreement could be reached with the Japanese, if the costs of building the infrastructure could be set at a reasonable level, the development could produce good benefits for the provincial economy. Supplies would be needed for the projects, services would have to be provided for the construction workers, and thousands of jobs would be created.

Those "ifs" are large ones. The costs of opening a whole new area of the province are not small. The rail spur alone is estimated to cost as much as $300 million, all from provincial coffers. An unknown further sum, but certainly hundreds of millions more, will be needed for ports, highways and townsites, as well as for development of the mines themselves.

Someone has to pay for that. The Japanese won't if they can obtain the coal they need from other sources more cheaply.

And the provincial government gamble could backfire badly if the glorious northern project turns into a giant subsidy program underwritten by B.C. taxpayers for Japanese steel firms.

Officially, the Japanese companies have not admitted they are willing to pay more than $65 per tonne for northeastern coal. Unofficially, government sources are hopeful that a price of $70-75 per tonne might be negotiated.

However, some experts suggest that even the additional $5 or $10 per tonne would not cover the extra costs of the infrastructure, estimated at $2.5 billion or more. Making various assumptions about the final costs of the rail line, interest rates during the construction period and other variables, they suggest that a price of between $90 and $115 per tonne might be necessary to recoup the cost of opening the area.

Using even the most optimistic figures (a $75 negotiated price and a $90 break-even figure), that would mean an annual subsidy of some $80 million on the expected contract of 5.3 million tonnes of coal per year. If more pessimistic figures are chosen (say, a $70 negotiated price and a $105 break-even figure), the subsidy could rise to $185 million or more a year.

That amount of money could provide a lot of winter works jobs.

Just what went wrong in the federal-provincial negotiations to cause B.C. to play the game alone is not clear. But it seems that Ottawa found the rising antes too rich for its deficit-thinned blood.

"They didn't seem to have any idea at all what a development railway was all about," said one provincial official. A rough translation could be that Ottawa believed freight railways should operate on the user-pay principle without government subsidies. B.C.'s development railways, the northern extensions of the B.C. Railway, have always required enormous government subsidies.

It is impossible to predict whether the coal deal will work or whether it will degenerate into a subsidy program. The government has refused to detail its intentions, the financing methods it is planning, or the total amount it is prepared to sink into the project.

Without this information, B.C.'s taxpayers are like a poker player who is in the game but is not allowed to see his cards. That's a big gamble.

Cheap oil, but less of it

OTTAWA — Back in December 1973, following the Arab oil boycott, Prime Minister Trudeau announced an exceptionally imaginative energy policy package that included a national energy company, a single national oil price to shield the five eastern provinces that depend on imported oil, and an extension from Toronto to Montreal of our oil pipeline from Western Canada.

The purpose of these initiatives, Trudeau said then, was to achieve, "self-sufficiency by the end of the decade."

By today, that is.

'Twas to dream. By 1982, according to the latest forecast of the National Energy Board, we will no longer produce enough oil to meet our needs, for domestic consumption west of the Ottawa River and for committed exports to the U.S. We import now 450,000 barrels of oil a day; by 1985, we will import 600-650,000 barrels a day.

Scarce supply

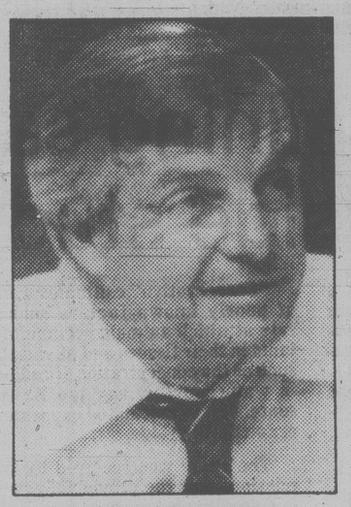
At the same time, oil at any price is getting harder and harder to buy. Last month, we had hoped to negotiate a contract to buy 100,000 barrels a day from Mexico, on a longterm basis; we had to settle for 50,000 barrels a day, on a year to year renewable contract. As for Iran, only Allah knows what next will happen there.

We've had some bad luck. Everyone keeps saying there's oil up there in the Arctic and off Newfoundland, but it hasn't yet been found. The new Syncrude tar sands plant has been plagued by start-up problems.

Mostly, if not overwhelmingly, we've been the architect of our own misfortunes. We've spent the seven years since 1973 fixiated on the price of oil, rather than upon the supply of oil. As an inevitable consequence, we have today cheap oil all right, but less and less of it.

To write, from the vantage point of Ottawa, that Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed has a point, is a bit like writing that Ayatollah Kohmeini is really a kindly old gent. But it's true, about Lougheed, not about Kohmeini.

In Halifax the other day, Lougheed explained that he had rejected Energy Minister Marc Lalonde's offer of an interim, three-month price deal because, "It creates a great deal of uncertainty . . . Either we try to work out a deal, or we don't."



PETER LOUGHEED
. . . long term oil deal

All Lalonde's offer would have done would have been to postpone for another three months all of the decisions that matter — how to assure our supply of oil; how much we should charge ourselves for our own oil, but over the long-term rather than the day after tomorrow; how to slice up the oil revenue pie between the industry, Alberta, and Ottawa on behalf of all other Canadians.

Lalonde had hoped to disengage the energy negotiations from the summer's round of constitutional negotiations. But the two are intertwined inextricable. As is "duality" to Quebec, so is energy to the West, the stuffing of Confederation itself.

For his battle with Lalonde, Lougheed has begun to enlist some allies. Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan led the applause when Lougheed told a Halifax luncheon that the constitution accords resource ownership to the provinces. New Brunswick's Hatfield emerged from a meeting with Lougheed to ask why Canadians should pay other Canadians (Albertans) only $14.75 a barrel for oil at the same time as we are about to pay the Mexicans $35 a barrel for their oil.

By contrast, Lalonde's only ally, silently and prayerfully, is Ontario's Bill Davis.

Since Lalonde is out to save us money at the pump, his isolation seems puzzling. One reason is that he's playing a shell game, but with see-through shells: He's trying to find ways to fulfill the Liberal election promises (no gasoline excise tax; low oil prices), but at the same time to earn for Ottawa the same amount of revenues as it would have had if both of these policies of the Clark government had been implemented.

Pricing policy

A more important reason for Lalonde's isolation is that he isn't trying to sell an oil policy. He's trying to sell only an oil price policy. Which is why neither he nor Trudeau have announced any new target date for achieving oil self-sufficiency.

Oil prices are important all right. But a good deal less than most people assume. Energy in total accounts for just five per cent of the Consumer Price Index.

So we're back to where we began in 1973. Then, we had an energy policy and a good one. Today, we have none. All we've got is cheap oil, and less and less of it.

HENRY SCOTT STOKES

The old guard may change

TOKYO — Since the mid-1960's, Japanese politics have been dominated by one set of conservative leaders of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, and the roster of these men has barely changed in 15 years.

But in recent months a new generation of younger conservative politicians has begun to emerge, the old faces have started to give way and the stage is set for the appearance of a new group of Liberal Democratic leaders to head the party in the 80's.

The choice of a successor to Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira, who died Thursday at the age of 70, will depend on the results of elections Sunday in which the ruling party is defending small working majorities in both houses of Parliament. It is likely, however, that the new wave of party leaders will influence the choice.

Japanese voters will decide Sunday the course of political change.

Party second

The extent of the changes in the party, which has governed Japan since being formed in 1955, can be judged by the situation in the five leading factions aligned behind major party figures and loyal to them first and to the party second.

The faction leaders, each with 30 to 50 members in the lower house, include former Prime Ministers Takeo Fukuda, 74, and Takeo Miki, 72, who are both past their prime and are prepared to relinquish control of their factions before long.

The Ohira group will have to find a new leader. The powerful faction of Kakuei Tanaka has the problem that the former prime minister is on trial, charged with taking bribes in the Lockheed affair.

The fifth faction will remain under the leadership of Yasuhiro Nakasone, 62. He alone among the five faction chiefs has not been head of government, and he will provide an element of continuity in the Liberal Democratic Party leadership. He is considered a demagogue with a small following in the business sector, which normally gives money to individual factions, not to the party directly, and he is not certain to become prime minister.

The shifts in the leadership of the factions seems as vital to Japan as the changing of the guard in medieval clans was to premodern Japanese history.

Who takes over? In the Fukuda camp, the up-and-coming man is Shintaro Abe, 56, who is related by marriage to former Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi, the doyen of the right. In the Miki faction, the heir apparent is Miki's deputy, Toshio Komoto.

The succession in the Ohira faction is yet to be established, although power there lies largely with Zenko Suzuki. Kiichi Miyazawa, 60, who was not personally loyal to Ohira, however, is another possible choice although he has no experience in key party posts.

Tanaka, who is said to have more money than any other party leader and ample time to maneuver behind the scenes, is likely to play a large part in deciding who succeeds Ohira as prime minister, especially if his faction gains strength in Sunday's elections.

Dependent on U.S.

The overall picture, then, is of a group of former prime ministers withdrawing from the forefront while opposition leaders and younger conservatives move toward power. A key figure in the opposition is Ryosaku Sasaki, 65, head of the Democratic Socialist Party, whose policies are indistinguishable from those of the ruling party.

Sasaki's party is a possible coalition partner, as is the small New Liberal Club led by Yohei Kono, 43, who created this splinter group from the Liberal Democrats four years ago. The ruling party has never had to form a coalition, but its large majorities of the 60's have been gradually whittled away and the possibility of a partnership is real.

Meanwhile, the question for the United States is whether the new generation of Japanese leaders will be as pro-American as their elders.

Japan is a greater power now than it was in the mid-60's; its economy is second only to that of the United States. The economic expansion was not matched by growth in military spending to Western levels, which appears to make Japan more rather than less dependent on the United States as an ally. None of the up-and-coming politicians have shown hostility toward the United States, and the Socialist Party, the top opposition group, sent its leader, Ichio Asukata, to Washington for the first time last year.

The possible candidates for prime minister — Messrs. Komoto, Nakasone, Miyazawa and others — agree, however great their rivalries, that the security pact with the United States is the cornerstone of Japan's foreign policy.

Of all stripes

The physicians' plea to the community which appeared in May 31 Times was indeed impressive if a little misleading. I would like to enlighten the public as to who these doctors really are who are publicly supporting the petition to retain pediatric and obstetrical units at all the hospitals.

The 196 doctors' names in the paper represented approximately 42 per cent of all the doctors in the Victoria area (this includes Sooke, Sidney and the Saanich Peninsula).

The names appearing in the paper were not all names of doctors giving primarily pediatric and maternity care. There were names of at least eight psychiatrists, seven bone specialists and four radiologists. Many of the senior citizens in this area will have recognized the names of specialists they would see more often than a newborn, a child or an expectant mother. For example, there were names of five urologists, six internal specialists, two rheumatology specialists and four heart specialists.

Of significant note, is the fact that only three out of 10 practicing pediatricians and five out of 11 practicing obstetricians/gynecologists have given their support to this petition.

Perhaps, now, the public can make an unbiased decision about the future of these hospital facilities. — M. Anne Boldt, R.N., 643 Niagara Street.

Pay for officials

In reporting a recent vote of the school board in favor of allowing trustees to decide freely upon the size of their own indemnities, your reporter did not see fit to note that the vote was not unanimous.

I wish it to be known that I am strongly opposed to the principle that a public body should vote itself its own pay packet. These matters should be determined by independent bodies and written into the appropriate school and municipal acts. The spectacle of elected officials opening each season with a vote for a raise in their own pay continues to disgust the general public. Some public bodies should be created, made up of persons who do not have a personal interest in the outcome to decide upon these matters, beginning with MPs, MLAs and down the line to locally elected persons. — Lavinia Greenwood, School Trustee, District 61.

A bad name

This is in regards to the controversy concerning towing companies. Some American friends of mine from Oregon recently phoned to say that their planned holiday trip to Vancouver and Victoria was being cancelled in favor of a trip to Banff instead. Although they had been to Banff before, they felt that they would feel more at ease there than in Vancouver or Victoria. Why?

It seems that these two cities, among others, are beginning to get a widespread reputation in the States, a reputation of, to quote my friends, "towing away all unattended cars, illegally parked or not."

I was unable to assure these good people that this wasn't so, because to tell the truth I'm not so sure that they aren't correct. No, I've never had my car towed away. I do know that if it were towed away I would feel a great deal of resentment toward a city that could condone such a practice.

In the U.S., towing companies do not have the authority to haul away a car without direct permission of city authorities who must have a valid reason for doing so.

These towing firms are giving our cities and our province a bad name, and their activities must be limited. They have too much arrogance and power. — Charles E. Morgan, 6921 Grant Road, Sooke.

Users should pay

Opposition to a fixed link seems based on, first, the increased accessibility it would provide and second, the cost to taxpayers who would receive little benefit.

What should be attacked is any subsidized access to the Island. This would be consistent with the user-pay concept which the Social Credit party once claimed to support.

Ferry users only pay half the cost of the service, with provincial taxpayers shouldering the balance. This makes the Island more accessible and increases taxes just as a fixed link would.

A resource will not be used wisely unless the people using it bear the full cost. Where the use is justifiable or necessary, the cost can be passed on directly instead of indiscriminately through taxes. — Michael Wheatley, 239 Richmond Road.

What's to lose?

Recruiting now — crew for rebuilt fishboat. Latest electronic detection devices. Destination Colombia. Huge bonus if operation successful on return to Canada. Risk factor negligible. Law courts known to be lenient. If venture fails, return fare guaranteed. What can you lose? — D. D. McCulloch, 89 Crease Avenue.

Mother-in-law power rules the roost in India

O, my friend! My in-laws' house is a wretched place.
My mother-in-law is a very bad woman.
She always struts about full of anger.
— A Punjabi folk ballad

By TYLER MARSHALL
The Los Angeles Times

NEW DELHI — Like dental visits and bad-tasting medicine, mothers-in-law the world over are counted among life's less pleasant experiences.

But in few places does this dreaded character loom larger, wield more power or generate more trepidation than in an Indian household.

Here, surrounded by a society where male domination remains an unshakable article of faith even among most women, the mother-in-law rules the lives of her extended family like a despot.

Unlike the West, where stories abound of the bride's mother and her meddling in her daughter's marriage, in India it is the husband's mother whose name sends shivers of fear through the house.

The prime target of this formidable figure is the bride, who by Indian tradition moves into the home of her new husband's parents and becomes a member of that family.

Like a sergeant major with a new recruit, the mother-in-law pounces ruthlessly on the newest family member, for Indian convention makes her control virtually total.

The mother-in-law djctates what the new bride must do each day and what she will wear as she does it, whom she may talk with, when she may go out of the house, and with whom. The new daughter is usually given the lowliest of the household chores and is often demeaned by being required to eat last.

When she is placed in the family spotlight — by being asked to cook a meal for example — it is often a carefully devised set-up. "Too much salt," the mother-in-law is likely to complain in front of as many people as she can gather. "Didn't your family teach you anything?"

Sometimes the torture is more subtle — but just as devastating. "Every word she says has a double innuendo," a long-suffering New Delhi woman said of her mother-in-law.

Frontal assault or by sneak attack, the bride, like the army recruit, stands little chance.

Often the mother-in-law has the help of her own sons and daughters, or even of other daughters-in-law already terrorized into submission.

With the relationship between mother and son — in Indian society the strongest of any family tie — usually sturdier than the new marriage bond, the husband provides little protection for his bride. To flee the oppression of her husband's home and return to her own family would bring disgrace upon those most dear to her as well as adding to their financial burden.

"If a girl has any ideas or personality of her own, there will be trouble," said Radha Kumara, a member of a women's rights group here that has studied extreme cases of domestic conflict. "Normally, after a while, the girl will prove herself a loyal, affectionate, dominateable slave. Capitulation is the only way she can survive."

The husband and father-in-law usually remain on the periphery of this drama, although, if family honor is at stake, they may step in.

"If there is too much screaming, the father would move to call a halt," psychologist Sudhir Kakar, a specialist on family relationships, said.

In recent years, however, there has been a growing number of incidents reported where brides have suffered physical torture and even death at the hands of their in-laws. More often than not, the mother-in-law spearheaded the attack.

Sociologist Yogendra Singh, of the Centre for the Study of Social Systems at Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi, attributes this trend partly to Indian brides' growing reluctance to submit to such domination by other members of the family.

"Young girls are often better educated today than their mothers-in-law, so, in addition to the traditional generational conflict, there are now basic differences in perception and outlook," he said. "They just will not accept domination so easily."

But the growing importance of dowries and the battles that surround them have triggered much of this violence. With luxuries like television sets and air conditioners available, many bridegrooms' parents view dowry as a golden opportunity to grasp what they could not afford themselves. They squeeze every last measure of dowry out of the bride's parents. Even then there usually is discontent.

"The mother-in-law sees the dowry as part of her own security in lieu of losing her son," Singh explained. "So she bargains hard."

In one highly publicized case last year, a bride of less than a year was burned alive by her mother-in-law and sister-in-law when the girl's parents failed to produce the promised dowry. Police estimate that 200 so-called dowry deaths occurred last year in New Delhi alone.

"Today in India, status requires not only privilege and power, but refrigerators and nice furniture," Singh said. "It's a reflection of the growing consumerism throughout the society."

Women's rights groups are quick to explain the contradiction of women being among the greatest exploiters of their own kind. They point out that the mother-in-law derives her power almost solely from the two males closest to her: her husband and her son.

Her rule is so oppressive, they say, because women are excluded from power anywhere else in the society. "It is all they have and they go mad," Kumar, the women's rights group member, said.

But there are other reasons.

Sociologist T.N. Madan of the Indian Council for Social Science Research talks of the emotional violence done when the Indian mother gives up her son to the young, pretty and "intruding" daughter-in-law.

"In the West, the mother-son bond is broken gradually over a number of years until he finally leaves home," he explained. "Here, the mother dotes on her son until the day he marries and then jealously tries to destroy her competitor."

In return for her sacrifices, the son usually remains loyal to his mother.

Seeing to it that her son heeds his obligation to the extended family is also a duty she takes seriously.

"She looks on the daughter-in-law as a threat to the family," Kakar explained. "If the girl were able to pull her husband away, it could be economically disastrous for the parents. This threat is so strong that the initial brainwashing and spirit-breaking must be severe."

For Indian girls, the expectation of an eventual confrontation with a malevolent mother-in-law is something instilled from an early age. Tales of the hard, spiteful woman into whose home she will one day be delivered are sprinkled heavily through rural folk lore and ballads. And the image is reinforced by older married sisters or friends.

"It is an expected part of their life," Kakar said. "They know what will happen to them."

Once married and under the thumb of her mother-in-law, the new bride has one consolation. Time is on her side.

When the father-in-law dies, the power of the mother-in-law diminishes sharply. Often, this means that the family moves and that the daughter-in-law and her husband become the heads of the household.

The mother-in-law's attempt to re-establish power under the new roof often fails. Sometimes, the daughter will settle the score by merely ignoring shouts from the woman who once made her cringe.

And if she is lucky, the daughter-in-law one day will give birth to a son. And she will devote herself to him totally.

For in her son lies her hope for long-term economic security as well as the chance one day to taste the power of a mother-in-law.

RCMP wiretap probe leaves dangling lines

THE VANCOUVER SUN
An Editorial

The report of the B.C. legislative committee investigating the wire-tapping of the office telephones of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen has left a few questions dangling.

The committee found that the bugging by the RCMP of Mr. Nielsen's phone between Sept. 1, 1976, and December 1977, when he was environment minister, was a breach of privilege and contempt of the legislature. But the committee recommended that no action be taken against the RCMP because the police acted according to the Criminal Code and no evidence was brought forward to indicate they knew their actions constituted a breach of privilege or contempt.

It is an interesting concept that ignorance of the law is enough excuse for the police, who are paid to know the rules, when it will not get the average citizen off the hook. But even more interesting is the committee's apparent blindness to the role of the attorney-general in the bugging case.

The law governing wiretaps makes it clear that the attorney-general of the province or someone acting for him must have known about the wiretap before it could have proceeded.

The law provides that before authorization for a tap can be given, an application must be made to a judge and "shall be signed by the attorney-general of the province in which the application is made or . . . or an agent specially designated in writing" by the attorney-general.

The Nielsen bugging, then, fell within the jurisdiction of Garde Gardom, who was attorney-general at the time, and would have required a signature — if not from Mr. Gardom personally, at least from his personally designated agent. Given that, wouldn't the RCMP have been cautioned by Mr. Gardom or his agent that the wiretap might breach legislative privilege?

Neither the RCMP nor the attorney-general should really be let quietly off the hook because they did not know or did not care about the legal or parliamentary propriety of a wiretap on Mr. Nielsen's telephone.

No suggestion was ever made that Mr. Nielsen himself was suspected of any crime. That made the bugging difficult to defend before the committee published its findings. Now that the report is out, the difficulties seem only to have multiplied.

Manners, memory and me

Katharine Whitehorn

LONDON — "Hello," I said, "I've been admiring that dress across the room ever since you came in."

The pretty lady eyed me levelly. "We've met before," she said. "Three times. You say that every time."

It had happened again. She thought I couldn't remember who she was. And sure enough I coudn't — but I had been admiring her dress, it was the prettiest in the room — and if I'd said it before she'd probably been looking good on the other two occasions too. Much good it did me.

It happens to us all. It happened to James Mason a month or two ago, and in the presence of royalty too: he forgot the names of a couple of Russian stars he was trying to introduce to Her Majesty. Novelist Mary Stewart may head the U.S. best-seller lists for weeks on end, but she still heads the red-faced list when she forgets the names of her husband's faculty, he being Sir Fred and a high-class professor at the University of Edinburgh. Like hiccups, like measles, these social gaffes can happen to anyone.

Of course there are rules, but they can't always work. "Ask someone about their job" — that's always supposed to be a safe opening. Except that someone tried it once on the late great actress Edith Evans: "And what do you do?" said this chap. At least she had the grace to reply, "I act — a little."

The other day I asked a man at a lunch, at which I was going to have to make a speech, if he had to speak ever: "As I've been a professional politician for 12 years . . ." began Lord St. Oswald. And when a pleasant woman who seemed to know me was chatting on a station platform recently, I tried the gambit: "Where did we meet last?" "At my house," said she coldly. "For dinner."

It was apparently Sir Thomas Beecham who first fell into conversation with someone whose face he thought he knew; he asked about her family; remembered vaguely that she had a famous sister: "And what's your sister doing now?" said he. The answer was perfectly friendly: "Still Queen."

It's ironical, it's sad; but the blithe idea that, as democracy sets in and social distinctions don't matter so much, we will all stop worrying about manners is sheer moonshine. You no longer wonder if they think you're not creme de la creme; you worry that they'll think you're dull. You don't worry about whether you're wearing the right gloves; you worry about whether you smell.

The other day I had to go (in the line of journalistic duty, I should perhaps say) to stay in a stately home — a real stately home, the kind they open to the public. It had a real butler (albeit an industrialist's son who was doing it for laughs and wore checked trousers) and housemaids to do our unpacking for us. I didn't worry about my tatty underwear being reverently deposited in the vast oak chest of drawers, or the fact that they would run you a bath and not tell you about it, or whether the staff would wonder what on earth sort of visitors they were getting now.

I worried about whether it was me who had shut my hostess' dog in the library, where it promptly made a puddle on the floor; whether I was drinking too much; whether I would find anything whatever to say at lunch — the things I would worry about anywhere.

However much you break down the social barriers, you don't do away with the things that really bother people. Are they hurting people's feelings because they can't remember names and faces? Am I mortally offending her because I haven't remembered the details of this woman's husband or dogs or divorce — or maybe I've got it wrong and she didn't divorce her dog, that was her mother. Never mind how I'm making out in Society; how am I doing as a human being?

It goes on being an insult to have forgotten who someone is. It goes on being agony to be dressed quite differently from all the others — and none the less so if they're all in jeans and you're in velvet. They may not care where I was born or what my accent is or whether I'm using the right spoon; never mind all that, do they like me? No manual of manners will ever get you round that — or the nasty little fact that in heaven, they may bore you; but in hell, you will bore them.

Cheaper route to Sukunka fields?

A consultant's report says coal can be taken out of the Sukunka fields of northeastern B.C. and moved to tidewater for a fraction of the cost now contemplated by the provincial government.

The report by H. N. Halvorsen Consultants Ltd. objects to the proposed spending of nearly $1 billion on an elaborate infrastructure to move northeast coal by rail to Prince Rupert.

This would involve construction of a 115-kilometre rail spur, upgrading of existing CNR track, building a coal port, developing a townsite and investing in rolling stock.

By comparison, the report says, for an investment of about $106 million in roads and a short rail spur, coal could be taken by truck and rail to Chetwynd.

From there it would be shipped by B.C. Rail unit trains to Neptune Terminals in North Vancouver.

A further $30 million would be needed to expand dock facilities in North Vancouver, the report says.

In that scenario, up to 4.5 million metric tonnes per year of coking coal could be shipped. The provincial government's plan would move 6.5 million tonnes of coking coal and 1 million tonnes of thermal coal per year.

However, the report warns that the Japanese steel industry is not expanding at the rate predicted in the 1970s and the requirement for coking coal is correspondingly lower.

"A total economic disaster can result if markets for this amount of coal do not develop, or develop slowly," it says.

Meanwhile, the three major coal companies involved in the massive northeast B.C. coal project will begin price negotiations with the Japanese steel industry this week — the ball placed firmly in their court Tuesday after months of federal-provincial bickering.

Representatives of Denison Mines Ltd., Teck Corp. and British Petroleum will be trying to get the Japanese to agree to a tonnage price for the five billion tonnes of rich metallurgical coal the companies hope to sell annually from the northeast coalfields.

The long-term value of the sale has been estimated at $3.5 billion to $5 billion.

The companies, who for months have had to wait patiently to find out what freight rates, surcharges and port costs they will be charged to move the coal to port at Prince Rupert, formally received those figures Tuesday.

"They have all the figures they need from the provincial government, railway and the federal government to proceed to make their deal in Japan," Industry Minister Don Phillips said.

Both Phillips and the coal companies are keeping tight-lipped on what price the companies will be seeking, but some industry sources have indicated it may be as high as $72 a tonne — $8 a tonne more than the Japanese currently are paying for southeastern B.C. coal.

Robert Andras, a Teck senior vice-president, said that while transportation and infrastructure costs will be the same, other costs can differ, so it will be up to each company to set its own price with the Japanese.

Phillips said negotiations could take as long as two months, adding that no preliminary work will be started in B.C. until there are take-or-pay contracts firmly in hand.

"That means the coal companies have signed a deal with the Japanese steel buyers to buy the coal . . . a take-or-pay contract with a minimum of 15 years — in other words they take the coal or they pay for it anyway."

In the legislature Tuesday, the opposition made another unsuccessful attempt to squeeze some financial information out of the government.

However, Premier Bill Bennett would give no details on what the total cost of delivering a tonne of coal to the Japanese will be, or what selling price the coal companies and the government have agreed on.

Bennett said he will not release the information while sensitive negotiations continue.

"The proof of the pudding will be in the results," he told the house.

MacEachen talks hard times, won't say 'recession'

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Allan MacEachen indicated Tuesday the Canadian economy is in for hard times but refused to admit a recession has started.

Statistics Canada reported earlier in the day the gross national product — the value of all goods and services produced in the country — declined 0.5 per cent in the first three months of this year, a drop of two per cent at annual rates.

MacEachen conceded to reporters the figures are "not an aberration or a fluke" and said a recession already under way in the United States will continue to hurt this country because of a decline in demand for Canadian exports.

MacEachen, who had confidently predicted growth of 0.5 per cent in the economy this year despite more pessimistic forecasts by other analysts, told the Commons he might have to revise his stand.

The first-quarter decline, combined with a drop in the second quarter of 1979, fits one commonly-used definition of a recession — two quarters of decline in the gross national product within one year.

However, by the U.S. definition of two consecutive quarters of no economic growth, Canada has not yet entered a recession.

The last time economic production dropped as much was in the second quarter of 1974, when a recession began that lasted until early 1975.

Progressive Conservative Sinclair Stevens and New Democrat Bob Rae, economic spokesmen for their parties, said debate over the definition of a recession is academic.

"I think people are just being cute if they suggest it is not here," Stevens said in an interview.

"We are like a ship at sea going through icebergs," he said. "We know we are going to hit that iceberg but the government says: 'Let's not worry about it until it happens'."

Most Canadians are preparing for a recession as business activity slows down and more people lose their jobs, Rae said in an interview.

"Business investment is being cut back, personal spending is being cut back," he said. "All of these things are signs that we are in a very difficult time ... and I think you could call it a recession."

Both opposition critics pressed MacEachen to bring in a budget to keep the Canadian recession from being as severe as the American version threatens to be.

Rae said the government is concentrating too much on reducing its $14.2-billion annual budget deficit and curbing inflation, when it should be stimulating the economy.

"The only way we are going to get the deficit down is if we get the economy working and moving and have people paying taxes instead of receiving unemployment insurance benefits."

MacEachen said the deficit is already providing enough stimulus and a larger one would not accomplish anything.

Stevens said the government should publish five-year plans including its anticipated spending and predictions of inflation, unemployment and GNP growth so businessmen could plan better.

The main areas dragging down growth in the GNP in the first quarter of 1980 were construction of new homes, down 6.1 per cent, merchandise exports, down 2.2 per cent, and personal spending on goods, up only 0.4 per cent.

These figures are adjusted for seasonal variations and exclude the effect of price increases.

Alberta oil talks begin

OTTAWA (UPC) — Alberta Energy Minister Merv Leitch today met for another round of oil-pricing negotiations with his federal counterpart Marc Lalonde, saying Alberta would accept a pricing package different from the one it negotiated with the former Conservative government.

Leitch, who last week rejected a proposed short-term agreement, met reporters before going in to the morning meeting with Lalonde, and said Alberta was willing to consider a short-term oil-pricing package if it approved of the terms.

The Tories, before their electoral defeat in February, had offered Alberta a $4-a-barrel increase this year and a $4.50-a-barrel boost in the price of oil in 1981 and 1982.

Leitch said Alberta had "always said we are prepared to discuss changes in the package that we were in the process of completing with the Conservative government and we're still prepared to do that."

He added Alberta would be agreeable to a one-month interim agreement if "there appears to be some advantage."

The current agreement expires on June 30, after which Alberta can set its own prices. The federal government, however, has the power to unilaterally set a national oil price, and Lalonde has suggested the government may do that if negotiations fail.

The minister reacted angrily to suggestions Alberta was harming the national interest by demanding higher oil prices.

Liberals rush anti-hijack bill

OTTAWA (CP) — Legislation to cut off air service to and from countries which do not take action against hijackers was introduced Tuesday in the Senate.

The bill also would prevent flights from countries which harbor hijackers from crossing Canadian territory.

A Liberal spokesman said the government wanted the legislation introduced before the opening of the seven-country summit conference in Venice this weekend.

At a similar meeting two years ago in Bonn, Prime Minister Trudeau joined the leaders of the other six major western industrial nations in condemning countries which do not take tough action against terrorism.

Introducing such legislation in the Senate before the Commons is an unusual step, but the Liberal spokesman said the Commons timetable is too heavy to have debate on the bill before the Venice conference opens.

The bill will go through second and third reading in the Senate before being considered by the Commons. Once the Commons gives it final approval, the bill will only require royal assent to become law.

Under the legislation, cabinet can prohibit air service from any country that refuses to extradite or prosecute hijackers or return the hijacked aircraft.

Air carriers that violate orders not to land in Canada or fly over Canadian territory would be subject to fines of up to $10,000.

The former Liberal government introduced less comprehensive anti-hijacking legislation following the Bonn summit meeting, but it was not passed.

In Bonn, the leaders pledged to intensify their common undertaking to fight international terrorism.

They agreed to terminate flights to and from countries which do not extradite or prosecute hijackers or return hijacked planes. They also agreed to ban flights of airlines from such countries which might originate in another country.

Canada already has a policy either to prosecute hijackers or send them to another country for prosecution. This applies to hijackers coming within Canadian jurisdiction even if their actions do not affect Canadians.

Alcan power production threatens salmon spawn

VANCOUVER (CP) — An Aluminum Co. of Canada employee said Tuesday the company is diverting large amounts of needed water away from salmon spawning grounds on the Nechako River so it can generate and sell surplus power.

The allegation followed a federal fisheries department suggestion in Ottawa last week that the company could face court action if water flows to the Nechako weren't doubled.

Most of the water goes through the 16-kilometre tunnel which leads to generators at Kemano, the project which fuels the company's aluminum smelter at Kitimat.

The employee, who insisted he would lose his job if he was identified, said the smelter requires 625 megawatts of power, but the Kemano station can produce 850 megawatts. He said Alcan has been selling the surplus power to B.C. Hydro, which, in turn, exports the power through its grid to the U.S.

An Alcan spokesman in Vancouver confirmed water is being diverted to Kemano and Alcan has an agreement to sell electricity to Hydro.

But Alcan public relations regional director Les Holroyd, refused to discuss recent sales. He said the sales are a private transaction between Alcan and Hydro, the Crown corporation.

Holroyd said a low snowpack is the major reason why spillway water flows have been reduced to 500 cubic feet a second.

Forbes Boyd, a fisheries employee in Vancouver, said Tuesday that Alcan would normally have had enough water in the reservoir for generating power and maintaining adequate water flows in the Nechako.

Boyd said a 1974-75 study by the fisheries department and the International Salmon Fisheries Commission determined the water flow required on the Nechako was 1,000 cubic feet a second.

He said the critical period for the spawning grounds would occur in the second week of July and the last two weeks of August, when hot weather and low water levels could threaten young salmon.

B.C. Liberals launch funds drive

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Liberal party leader Jev Tothill said Tuesday $70,000 to $100,000 a year is the bare minimum required to support a full-time party leader and an executive assistant.

"That's not a fat figure," he said in a telephone interview from his home in Duncan. "You would need every cent of it to do the job properly."

Tothill was commenting on a statement earlier Tuesday by B.C. Liberal party president Shirley McLoughlin who said the party will try to raise between $70,000 and $100,000 a year to cover the salary of a full-time leader and an executive assistant, plus their expenses.

McLoughlin said the party executive has decided to turn the next annual meeting — in May, 1981 — into a leadership convention.

Tothill, 51, educational television co-ordinator with the Cowichan school district, has been party leader since February, 1979. He succeeded Gordon Gibson Jr. who resigned in January, 1979, to return to federal politics.

The party does not have a member in the present legislature. "I'm the leader until a leadership convention and I expect to contest any challenges," Tothill said. "I am prepared to be a full-time leader. That's what is needed."

Tothill said if he is selected to continue as leader, and the money to do the job full-time is right, he will get a leave of absence from his regular job.

Charlottes recovering 3 totems

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Three Haida totem poles taken from the Queen Charlotte Islands more than 30 years ago will be returned.

Prince Rupert city council has agreed to write a letter to the Museum of Northern B.C., where the poles have been held in trust for the Massett and Skidegate Indian bands, allowing the museum to transfer the poles to the museum in Skidegate.

Two of the poles, the Eagle and Grizzly Pole and the Flower Pole, were taken from the native village of Yan during the Second World War by two men who might have planned to sell them illegally, said Ron Denman, administrator of the Museum of Northern B.C.

The third pole was taken from the village of Tanu.

Partners Diane Phillips, Larry Graham

In Inner Harbor

Their classic dreamboat is for charter

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The Inner Harbor causeway is breezy but several middle-aged ladies with shopping bags sit on benches enjoying a little afternoon warmth from the surprisingly cool June sun.

A handful of tourists inspect the few boats docked at the city floats.

Nearby the Sea Lion, a rugged old tug turned oceanographic charter vessel, rests until the next booking.

Next to it is the berth reserved for the Robertson II, a faded Nova Scotia schooner now run by a non-profit society dedicated to introducing youngsters to the high seas.

A 56-foot classic, gaff-rigged ketch is tied up below the wharf. A note written neatly in blue ink on a white pad attached to the wharf rail informs visitors the Wind Chariot is for hire.

Below deck, owner-builder Larry Graham kindly informs this landlubber reporter a gaff-rigged ketch is constructed more along traditional lines with square-looking sails.

"Most sailboats today are Marconi rigs with triangular sails," he explains.

Graham's partner, Diane Phillips, is unpacking plants in the galley. Warm-toned pine and cedar panelling and the pot-bellied stove make the roomy salon seem friendly and comfortable.

The tongue-and-groove oak floorboards were recycled from an old house. Other building material and equipment was salvaged, or purchased carefully from fishing supply stores rather than pricey yachting outlets.

The end result is proof you don't have to be rich to own a beautiful sailboat, Diane says, just self-disciplined and determined.

The pair live on board and dreams of chartering year-round — never again to work at boring city jobs.

Larry started building the boat four years ago in Halfmoon Bay, a little fishing village below San Francisco.

"I was living on her even while she was on land," he says.

Both Canadians, they sailed the Wind Chariot home to finish her.

Completion of the boat this spring and the first official charter — a two-day Swiftsure outing — meant the dream had come true.

"I built her with the purpose of having a comfortable place to live and at the same time seeing her pay for herself by having charters," Larry said.

As far as they are concerned the charter service they offer has no competition.

"No other people are offering a skippered service in a character boat in these waters," Larry points out.

The Wind Chariot is available for almost any kind of adventure; from a half-day cruise of the Gulf Islands to two weeks exploring the west coast of Vancouver Island.

A sunset cruise for four or six people featuring a full dinner, wine and four hours at sea at $75 a couple is another idea they want to get off the ground.

The overnight rate is $100 a person based on a minimum of four people and includes everything.

Cost is $75 a day each if the clients supply their own food.

The boat has three two-person staterooms but can accomodate more than six if people don't mind sleeping in the salon or on deck.

The boat is equipped with all the comforts of home, including a shower and 10 gallons of hot water in the head (bathroom) and a genuine oak toilet seat taken from an old house in San Franciso.

Larry skippers the boat and if asked will chart a course. Diane cooks what she describes as a wholesome meals with the emphasis on seafood dishes.

All clients have to do is relax and enjoy it. Learning how to sail is optional. The agenda is flexible and based on the weather and tides.

"It's completely open, so people can use their imaginations," Larry says.

The Wind Chariot weighs 30 tons and is very steady and comfortable, Larry likes to assure nervous potential clients.

So far no one has suffered from sea sickness.

Pollution signs posted on nine area beaches

Nine beaches in the Victoria area have been posted with warning signs that the water is subject to pollution.

Don Wakelyn, the Capital Regional District's public health inspection director, says eight of the beaches are in Saanich and the other in Colwood at the foot of Portsmouth Drive on the Esquimalt Lagoon.

The Saanich areas posted include four at Cordova Bay, two in Mount Douglas Park, one at Sayward Beach and one at the Telegraph Bay Road beach access to Cadboro Bay.

The signs state "Warning — This water subject to pollution."

The latest postings became necessaey as a result of routine bacteriological sampling of water at reacreational areas.

Signs may be posted at any place where the fecal coliform count rises above 400 colonies per 100 ml. on two or more weekly tests, or above a logarithmic average of 200 colonies per 100 ml. for five consecutive weeks.

The sites that were posted represent only a small part of the total area which is tested on a regular basis by CRD public health inspectors.

Policeman rescues drifting sailors

Three Victoria men, all in their 20s, were rescued by Esquimalt policeman Derek Reid Tuesday night after the outboard engine of their newly-bought sloop, Lost Penny, broke down.

Rick and Robert Boldt of 811 Russell and Peter Phillips of 1007 Collinson were out in Lost Penny when the engine quit some time before 10 p.m.

There was no wind to sail and the boat began drifting onto the rocks at Saxe Point.

A passerby heard their calls for help and notified Esquimalt police.

Reid launched the Provincial Emergency Program inflatable rescue craft.

300-unit mobile home site considered for Highlands

A 44-acre site in the Highlands may become a mobile home park for about 300 units.

The lands, parks and housing ministry has had a feasibility study done to determine whether the site — across Millstream Road from Western Speedway — would be suitable for mobile homes.

The study is now being considered by regional lands manager Doug McColl and the matter will then be ruled on by Lands Minister James Chabot, a ministry spokesman said Tuesday.

McColl said initial consideration indicates the site could be considered for such a use.

He said he hopes to make a final report to the minister by the end of the month.

"The action is in response to a request from the Mobile Home Owners Association. However, I have made it clear to the association that any development of this land must conform to local government zoning regulations," Chabot said earlier this week.

The ministry has had preliminary discussions with the Capital Regional Board which controls zoning in the Highlands.

The property is not currently zoned for mobile home use.

McColl said the land could either be sold to a private developer or could be developed by the CRD.

NDP MLA Frank Mitchell, who has worked with the association on the project, said the question of mobile home space came up because of the recent closure of two mobile home parks in the western community.

Mitchell said he would like to see the land permanently zoned for mobile home use only, because in the other two instances, people were forced to move their mobile homes when the land became more valuable as commercial property.

Charles Hunt, president of the Mobile Home Owners Association, said there is a terrific shortage of mobile home sites in the Victoria area.

Indian bands opened their land for mobile home parks, said Hunt, but often these parks are not developed in accordance with provincial regulations governing such things as setbacks.

Because Indian reserves are Crown land, the parks are not required to meet provincial legislation.

The Highlands District Community Association, which has been lobbying to preserve the Highlands for long-term recreational use, doesn't have any major objections to the mobile home park proposal.

Dr. Bob McMinn, a spokesman for the group, said the site being considered borders the residential area of the Highlands and doesn't interfere with the trail system the association wants for the area.

Federal workers protest again

Federal government employees in Victoria held a noon-hour demonstration today, the second such protest in about a week to show their displeasure with the pace of contract negotiations.

The clerical, regulatory and data process workers paraded today in front of the federal building on Government.

On June 10, about 250 of them held a similar show of force at HMC Dockyard in Esquimalt.

Another demonstration is scheduled for next Wednesday in front of the unemployment insurance building, 810 Fort.

Several hundred of their counterparts demonstrated Tuesday on a downtwon Vancouver street. Other protests have been staged in Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and Quebec City.

There are 55,000 across Canada in this particular component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, about 1,000 in the Greater Victoria area.

They are impatient with what union officials say is an unrealistic two-year wage offer after more than seven months of negotiations and mediation with the government.

The government has offered seven per cent in each year of a two-year contract without cost-of-living protection.

The union is demanding 11 per cent in the first year and nine per cent in the second with cost-of-living protection. Also at issue are improved annual leave, a reduction to a 35-hour-work week from the current 37½ hours and improved vacations.

A nationwide federal employee strike would shut down taxation centres, unemployment and pension offices and other government services.

Al Hadvick, the union's B.C. regional director, said strike committees have been set up across the country and only 6,400 essential service workers could be working by late August if the soon-to-be appointed conciliation board fails to produce wage and benefit proposals to compensate inflation and workers' loss of earning power.

Hadvick said the average wage for the government clerks, including about 3,700 data processing employees, is about $12,800 a year.

Too many signs, says city

Council to order Bill Hartley's 'garish' signs removed

The city will tell insurance agent Bill Hartley to remove a number of signs cluttering up the outside of his building at Bay and Douglas.

Council's land use planning committee Tuesday backed up the heritage advisory committee's complaint about garish, fluorescent orange advertising signs.

When Hartley moved from Government Street to the heritage structure at 2420 Douglas he was given several concessions by city council for preserving the historic bank building.

Aldermen said Tuesday they were astounded that Hartley later proceeded to plaster several ugly signs advertising his business on the exterior.

During the federal election it also became a billboard for the NDP's bright orange and black signs supporting local candidate Ald. Robin Blencoe.

Committee chairman Ald. Bob Wright said he was surprised that members of council of the same political persuasion — Hartley is a former NDP cabinet minister — hadn't protested the clutter of signs before now.

In a moving presentation to city council last year when he bought the old bank, Hartley outlined how he would respect the historic qualities of the building, Wright said.

"The moment he got it he put up garish fluorescent signs that made it look like a travelling circus."

Meanwhile, aldermen rejected heritage designation as a way of protecting Pinehurst, a 95-year-old James Bay mansion which is slowly falling down.

On a recommendation by the heritage advisory committee, the land use planning committee voted 2-1 against the idea.

Wright and Ald. Ken Sinclair voted it down with Ald. Bill McElroy supporting designation.

Wright pointed out that council several years ago rejected designation of the house at 617 Battery because of the owners strong opposition.

He also said designation wouldn't protect the building from falling down. It would probably cost $50,000 to $100,000 to restore the house and the few thousand dollars in tax rebates available under heritage designation wouldn't go very far, Wright said.

He and Sinclair both said they would support designation — which would prevent demolition or exterior alterations without prior approval of council — if the owners, Mr. and Mrs. G. Larry Lee, also were in favor.

Exclude all Gulf Islands from transit tax: Curtis

All of the Gulf Islands in the Capital Regional District should be exempted from the special electricity surcharge levied for regional transit services, Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said Tuesday.

Referring to last week's exemption of Salt Spring Island, the MLA for Saanich and the Islands said in a letter to CRD chairman Jim Campbell he has had strong protests from residents of Saturna, Mayne, Galiano and Pender Island, which Campbell represents on the CRD.

The chairman has been staunchly opposed to exemption of the islands.

"All have pointed to the inherent unfairness of imposing such a tax on islanders who have no easy access to urban and suburban bus transportation," said the minister.

Curtis, a former chairman of the CRD, said he hoped Campbell and the rest of the CRD directors would ask the Urban Transit Authority to exclude all of the islands from paying the $12 annual surcharge for homeowners and $90 for businesses.

The amount of money at stake is not known precisely. The estimate of revenue raised from Salt Spring alone was $175,000. If the islands are all exempted, residents and businessmen in the rest of the CRD will have to pick up the difference.

They should continue to pay the surcharge because they have improved access to transit which will get even better in the future, Curtis said.

Exclusion of more areas may come up again at next week's CRD board meeting. Last week when directors voted 21-20 to exclude Salt Spring, director Dave Hill, mayor of Central Saanich, said he would propose a motion exempting the other islands.

Other directors mentioned such areas as Willis Point in the Highlands and parts of North Saanich.

Plan turned down

A neighborhood plan for Gordon Head was rejected by Saanich council Tuesday night.

The proposed plan — several months in preparation — is the first of 11 neighborhood plans slated to go before council.

Aldermen were told the months of work put in by planners won't be wasted as much of the material can be included in the next plan.

Council's rejection of the plan came at the end of a four-hour public meeting.

More than 200 people crowded the council chamber and many expressed concern about a projected population increase of 6,000 for the area by 1996.

This would involve additional multiple housing which already accounts for 12 per cent of the homes in the neighborhood.

Complicating the deliberations is the fact Saanich's neighborhood plans can't conflict with the Capital Regional District plan.

Chief municipal planner Gil Laurenson said population growth was the main area of concern of residents at planning meetings in Gordon Head and Cordova Bay.

Several residents criticized council for not getting information about the planning sessions to the public.

A local ratepayers association survey revealed 53 per cent of Gordon Head's 786 householders were unaware local area planning was under way.

Council agreed to set up a storefront planning office in the neighborhood.

Padres spoil Blues' opener but fans see lots of action

By ERNIE FEDORUK

For one baseball enthusiast, the most significant aspect of Victoria Blues' opening game in the Northwest League did not ride with Tuesday's score. Or, for that matter, with any of Tuesday's happenings.

Instead, he suggested, the "significant thing will be Wednesday's crowd."

Walla Walla Padres were the spoiling sports, capitalizing on a pair of important breaks in the 10th inning to defeat the home team 8-6 before 510 fans.

While a seemingly modest total, 510 is almost double the average the class A professional team generated at Royal Athletic Park while operating as Mussels for the past two seasons.

Old B.E. (Baseball Enthusiast) had a point. The opening-night audience was treated an entertaining game, if you can forget the result. There was action all the way, mistakes to keep interest humming, and the 10 innings were completed in a few minutes shy of three hours.

It will be interesting to see how the fans respond when the teams meet again in Athletic Park tonight.

Blues' majority owner Robert Peden and general manager Lorne Barnswell tried to keep things humming and organized behind the scenes, and field manager Jim Gattis did his best to achieve success on the field.

Trouble was, from Gattis' point of view, "there were some good things and some that weren't so good.

"Our mental mistakes cost us the game," he said. He felt mental mistakes cost Blues one run and allowed Walla Walla their first score, all in the first inning. Another, "and a physical one," teed up Walla Walla's winning, three-run burst in the extra inning.

On the other hand, Gattis was pleased with a defense that turned in three double plays and the Victoria bats that pounded out 12 hits. He modestly refrained from mentioning that his bat contributed a solo home run, a single and a run-scoring double.

Despite his three hits as Victoria's designated hitter, Gattis would prefer to placing his greatest concentration on managing.

"It's difficult to manage and play. I'll be out as soon as we get another bat into the lineup," he said.

Padres struck quickly when an attempted pickoff of Bill Henley, who led off with a walk, backfired. Starting pitcher Mike Otto's errant throw went into right field and allowed Henley to wind up on third. He promptly scored on Mike Bertalot's long fly ball to left.

Greater damage was done in the 10th. Centre fielder George Hinshaw opened by drawing a walk. Catcher Rick Witt then lofted a drive to right field that Blues' Leo La Sala lost in the lights. It fell for a single and Hinshaw wound up on third base.

Walla Walla's next batter hit a ball to Barry Moss and the Blues' first baseman tagged the bag for the easy out rather than try to gun down the go-ahead run at home plate.

With Witt at second, Blues purposely walked George Perez. Technically, the right move. It backfired, however, when reliever Tony Nigro's pitch eluded catcher Don Hyman. Both runners took their chances on the passed ball and Hyman's throw to nab Witt at third was a wild one. Witt scored easily, Perez wound up at third and then scored on a sacrifice fly.

Successive doubles by Gattis and Moss got one run back but that wasn't enough to undo the damage done in the top of the 10th.

In addition to Gatts' three hits, Moss belted out two doubles while outfielder Lazondo Washington had a single and double.

In four June days Jack becomes a man of people

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. — For the longest of times, the galleries could not warm up to him. He was fat and bland and he took an eternity to strike each shot. And far from the least of it, he was a threat to Arnold Palmer, their king.

Then the king slowed down and the fat man slimmed down and became the very best at his profession.

However, while the galleries acknowledged this and respected him for his marvelous ability, they never opened their hearts to him, the way they did for Palmer or even Lee Trevino.

He was simply Jack Nicklaus, one of the greatest golfers who ever lived, and that was that. Take it or leave it, Golden Bear. Respect you get. Love you don't.

But on a steamy afternoon last Sunday, amid the flora and fauna and sand traps of the Baltusrol Golf Club, love finally found Andy Hardy.

The gallery, wild and sometimes almost uncontrollable, whooped and hollered and called out encouragement, and 40-year-old Jack Nicklaus, whispered to be finished as a major tournament threat, responded to the cheers by winning his fourth U.S. Open.

The encouragement began when he reported to his office — that is, the practice range — an hour before his tee-off time.

The crowd sitting in the grandstand behind the range broke into applause.

"C'mon, Jack, you can do it," a man yelled, and a lady patted him on the back as he walked past and told him, "This will be your day; I know it."

The response was the same on every hole in this last safari around the 7,076-yard monster tucked away amid the neat little homes of this northern New Jersey suburb.

As he approached each green, applause would tumble from the multitudes, and as he walked down each fairway, the words of encouragement would ring out.

"Go get 'em, Jack"

"You're due, Jack."

"Do it, Bear."

When Isao Aoki, the brilliant player from Yokohama, drilled an iron within a foot of the hole on No. 8, a fan yelled, "C'mon, Jack, forget that one. Don't play him."

He acknowledged the applause and yells with that enigmatic little smile and short wave that have become his trademark. When it was over and he was asked about the enthusiasm, he said, "The galleries were fantastic."

Why the turnaround? Why, after all these years, has the American golfing public decided to clasp Nicklaus to its bosom, to Palmerize him, as it were?

He is still an agonizingly slow player, standing motionless over putts until you would swear he had turned to stone. He doesn't say witty things or play flamboyantly. He is no longer Fat Jack, but he is still Jack.

The answer might be, I suppose, that Americans, in and out of sport, don't realize what they have until there is a strong possiblity that it won't be around much longer.

Nicklaus had been rumored to be all through. It had been suggested that if he kept playing in tournaments, he would only be embarrassing himself.

Suddenly, after two decades of being the overdog, he had become the underdog, somebody to empathize with and root for.

And so Sunday, they cheered for him at Baltusrol, in a manner he'd never heard, and he was affected by it.

"I'd thought an awful lot about not playing anymore," he said. "But today, the way I played and the way the people were, I just have to keep on playing."

The victory did not come easily. Baltusrol is not a gambling type of course, where decisions must be made on whether to hit over ponds or lay up.

No, at Baltusrol, it is wind up and fire. Then you reload and do it again, and you must be long and straight or you pay a price.

For most of Sunday, Nicklaus was long and straight, faltering only on holes 6 through 8, hitting his tee shot into the rough each time.

After that, he was vintage Nicklaus, smashing long, high drives that brought short bleats of astonishment from those clustered around the driving area.

Nicklaus has a feel for this game that transcends the mere striking of a golf ball. The other day, when he heard that Tom Weiskopf had casually backhanded a short putt and missed, Nicklaus went up to Weiskopf and asked him why in the world he would do such a thing.

He found it inconceivable that Seve Ballesteros would show up for an Open tee time five minutes late.

Late Sunday afternoon, after he had sunk a 10-footer for a birdie on the 18th, the jubilant crowd began to rush onto the green, in the manner of a World Series or Super Bowl celebratory surge. Aoki had yet to putt, so Nicklaus, in the middle of his greatest moment in more than two seasosns, stopped and motioned to the crowd to wait, to allow the Japanese player to finish.

In his acceptance talk, Nicklaus paid tribute to the gallery.

"You people ... " he said. "I've never been to a place where I was received like I've been here."

The thousands around the 18th green responded to his victory by chanting, "Jack, Jack, Jack," and when he emerged from the scorer's tent, they again broke out in wild cheering.

The golfing genius whom everyone had long respected had become, on these four days in June, a man of the people.

Three-way dead heat

EDMONTON (CP) — Three three-year-old fillies finished in a dead heat for first place in a race at Edmonton's Northlands track Tuesday.

Larry Ross, announcer at the track, said the odds of such a thing happening are "most definitely in the millions," especially considering the sloppy track conditions caused by a thunderstorm.

"In my 25 years at the track, I've never seen a three-way tie for first place," he said.

The three horses — Slightly Shady, Anne Ivers and Naughty Cage — ran in the featured race.

Burrards slam Rocks

Vancouver Burrards defeated Victoria Shamrocks 9-3 Tuesday night in Western Lacrosse Association action before about 600 fans in Vancouver.

Vancouver led 5-1 after one period and 6-3 after two in a chippy, penalty-ridden game.

Vancouver's John Swan got three goals and Doug Hayes got two — his second a power-play goal which broke a WLA record of 139 set by Paul Parnell. Hayes' goal puts the new record at 140.

Singles were netted by Dave Tasker, Mike McMillan, Vern Baker, and Dan Perrault.

Victoria's Jim Lynch scored two and Kevin Alexander managed a single.

Shamrock's Larry Smeltzer and Brian Celli of the Burrards both made 42 stops in their respective goals.

Vancouver took 66 minutes in penalties, Victoria had 43.

The teams meet again tonight at 8 in Memorial Arena and Shamrock coach Joe McCrea is hoping to beef his team up a little. Team manager Ralph Baker said Tuesday night he was going to contact Jack Fulton and try to talk him into playing.

The Rocks signed Fulton last week but so far he has only committed himself to playing next season.

Tuesday night's win was the first of the season for the Burrards, who are starting to play much better now that university is out and Mike Smith and Mike McMillan have rejoined the Vancouver club.

Expos recovering

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Montreal Expos' batters are coming back slowly from their lost weekend.

"We got two runs," Manager Dick Williams said proudly Tuesday night. "They were off a very good pitcher."

The runs meant a victory, too, as Woodie Fryman came out of the bullpen in the eighth inning to save the decision for young David Palmer. The Expos ended a three-game losing streak by beating San Francisco Giants and Vida Blue 2-1.

After winning 10 straight games, the Expos ran into Los Angeles Dodgers' Burt Hooton and Bob Welch during the weekend and suffered two shutout losses. On Monday night, they fell 5-1 to the Giants' Ed Whitson and their lead in the National League East shrunk to three percentage points over Pittsburgh Pirates.

Blue, 9-3, went into the game with a personal seven-game winning streak.

The Expos collected seven hits, the first six off Blue who worked eight innings. The hits that counted were consecutive singles by Warren Cromartie, Bob Pate and Ken Macha in the second, when one run scored, and Jerry White's sixth-inning home run.

Cheers help Legion

Home crowd cheering is having a positive result for Esquimalt Legion.

Fans encouraged the Legion players to a 10-8 win over Burnaby Cablevision in their Western Canada Junior Lacrosse League game Tuesday night and it was the fifth victory in seven starts in the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

The Legion's record on the road has been pretty dismal, though, and the Esquimalt club is bottom of the five-team league with five wins and nine losses.

Esquimalt trailed 7-3 going into the final period but turned the game around quickly with three goals — two by Brian Bell and one by Gord Taylor — in the first three minutes.

Newcomer Sean Doyle scored four goals for Esquimalt and the other scorers were Ed Van Dyk, Lyle Gurney and Terry Jay.

Burnaby got two goals each from Gary Purdon and Paulo Brunoro and the other Cablevision scorers were Kevin Robinson, Lyle Robinson, Doug Van Beek and Larry Crema.

Als hammer Argos

MONTREAL (CP) — Keith Baker scored a pair of touchdowns and Fred Biletnikoff caught his first touchdown pass in a Montreal uniform as the Alouettes romped to a 31-16 victory over Toronto Argonauts in a Canadian Football League exhibition game Tuesday night.

The victory was Montreal's second in as many pre-season starts while Toronto is winless in two.

Montreal led 17-9 after the third quarter and exploded for two more TDs with Canadian Gerry Dattilio quarterbacking in the fourth quarter.

Baker scored his second touchdown on an end reverse from Toronto's 14-yard line at 1:31 of the fourth quarter to extend Montreal's lead to 24-9.

Dattilio later hit rookie wide receiver Jean-Pierre Normand in the endzone with a nine-yard pass.

Boost in population planned for B.C. deer

by stewart lang

Deer, which have been declining in British Columbia for the last few years, will be enhanced under a plan drawn up by the provincial fish and wildlife branch.

The objectives of the move are outlined in one of the three latest provincial management plans drawn up by the branch. A plan on the Canada goose and another encompassing the fox, raccoon and squirrel were released at the same time.

All are available from branch headquarters in Victoria and public input is being sought before revision into formal five-year plans for each species.

The deer plan should be of particular interest for people on Vancouver Island, which boasts almost half the total number of mule and black-tailed deer in the province. Latest figures estimate a population of 200,000 black-tailed deer on the Island and a total of about 410,000 mule and black-tails for all of B.C. Black-tails are a subspecies of mule deer.

Plan objectives are to:

● "Increase the deer population to 475,000 animals (mule, 150,000; black-tailed 275,000; white-tailed 50,000) distributed within their present range.

● "Provide 900,000 hunter days of recreation and an annual sustained hunter kill of about 60,000 animals.

● Provide opportunities for people to view deer in their natural habitat."

But there are a few problems.

The deer is "one of the few large mammals that has in many localities adapted to and sometimes benefited (temporarily) from man's modification of the land through logging, burning and farming," explains the plan.

Early settlement produced ideal summer habitat through land clearing practices and there was still enough winter range left.

"Fluctuations in numbers, depending on a wide range of factors, have undoubtedly occurred in this province but peak numbers were probably reached in the late fifties and early sixties while low numbers were reached in the seventies.

"More recently extensive clear-cut logging, hydro impoundments and urban expansion have decreased the value of, or eliminated completely, many habitats."

Further along, the plan states:

"These declines were inevitable as it was impossible to maintain the high deer densities of earlier years in the face of considerable habitat deterioration and loss."

The major cause of this decline was that cleared, logged or burned over areas became too old to produce the necessary quantities of high quality forage species. In addition, these areas were not replaced at rates equal to natural reforestation because of improved forest fire protection.

"Habitat loss has also occurred with the extensive logging of climax forests which are important to deer for food and cover in areas of heavy snowfall such as northern Vancouver Island and parts of the Cariboo and Thompson areas."

The plan adds that deer are always susceptible to high mortality during harsh winters.

"Less mature timber increases the risk during long cold winters with heavy snow accumulation.

"Such mortality is beyond the control of the biologist but a series of severe winters could reduce the deer population in B.C. by more than 50 per cent."

One of the surprising facts emerging from the plan involves the amount of meat hunting produces in British Columbia.

"Since 1970, the average annual harvest of about 41,000 deer has produced about 1,500 metric tons (3,300,000 pounds) of meat, contributing substantially to this province's annual meat production."

For comparison purposes, in 1979, 14,000 metric tons (30,800,000 pounds) of beef and 10,000 metric tons (21,000,000) of hogs were produced in British Columbia.

Thus you have a recreational pursuit which produces about a tenth of the amount of meat generated by the cattle industry.

Obviously, it's in the government's best interests to improve the care of such a valuable renewable resource.

Tennis cards must be in before extended deadline

Time — once again — is running out for competitors in the seventh annual Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis tournament.

This time, though, it's not the deadline for entries that's closing in but the deadline for the playing of all those first-round matches.

So far, we're not doing too well in the summer-long competition with only a quarter of the scheduled games played and the results handed in. Competitors were given two weeks to get a total of 96 first-round matches played.

Well, that was nearly two weeks ago and by Tuesday night only 25 games have been completed and reported! That leaves only three days in which to get 71 games played and the Times Sports Department notified of the result.

The first-round deadline was set originally at 5 p.m. this Saturday. Because of the very unsettled weather, however, we are extending this slightly to include this weekend. But all matches must be played and the score reported to us by 5 p.m. Monday, June 23, by the latest or both players involved will be defaulted.

These deadlines must be kept or the five events will not be played through to the semi-final stage by Aug. 23 and 24 when the tourney winds up at Oak Bay's Henderson Park.

Cards will be mailed out next Tuesday informing players of their opponents for their second-round matches.

And don't forget, players can get a look at the full draw sheets in the Times newsroom or at Centre Court Racquets in the Stadacona Centre on Pandora Avenue.

Horse racing gets a boost

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. government has relaxed the purse strings for horse racing and the big winners are the breeding industry and owners of B.C.-bred horses.

Retroactive to the start of the season, the government's seven-per-cent share of the total 17 per cent pari mutuel takeout from both thoroughbred and standardbred racing will be redistributed, said Attorney-General Allan Williams.

The government will return 1.5 per cent of its share to the breeding industry and increase to two per cent from one per cent the amount that goes to the B.C.-bred bonus for owners, Williams told a news conference at Exhibition Park.

Based on the projected handle for all horse racing in B.C. this year, the amount available for bonuses and breeder awards is estimated at $5.3 million.

Black eliminates Bland

TORONTO — Susan Black and Angela Walker, both of Toronto, won semi-final matches Tuesday to qualify for the women's singles final in the Canadian national under-21 tennis championships.

Black downed Jennifer Bland of Victoria 6-3, 6-4 while Walker defeated Jill Hetherington of Brampton, Ont., 6-3, 7-5.

Glenn Michibata of Toronto will meet Stephane Bonneau of Quebec City in the men's final. Both championship matches are today.

Gray's three cracks help A's reach top

Former senior "A" player Bob Gray cracked three hits Tuesday to lead Victoria Athletics to a 3-1 victory over Royal Oak Inn at Central Park and into a share of first place in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League.

The scoring was opened by Jim Boyd, who led off the first inning with a walk, went to second on a sacrifice by Randy Cavanaugh and scored on a two-base error.

Gray singled Tim Galavan home in the second inning for what proved to be the winning run and Bob Bugslag scored the third run in the third inning when he reached first on a fielder's choice, went to second on a passed ball and came home on a double by Galavan.

Pat Strandlund scored the only Royal Oak run in the fourth inning.

Mel Nelson gave up seven hits for the win.

Mears Realty committed six errors and lost 6-3 to Remco Office Systems in Heywood Men's League play at Heywood Avenue Park.

Mears got seven-hit pitching from Russ Minnis and two singles and three runs driven in by Barry Kalyn.

Labatts blanked Mega-Power 5-0 and Trafalgar Legion nipped Coast Projects 4-3 in Macdonald Park Men's League games.

Travelodge defeated Prairie Inn 3-1 in the Sidney Men's League's only game at Sanscha Park.

In Victoria-Saanich Women's Softball League play at Hyacinth Park, Nancy McLaughlin hurled a four-hitter, striking out six and walking one as New York-New York shut out Vidalin Construction 5-0 and Strathcona Stingers crushed Victoria Athletics, 10-2.

The big hitter for New York-New York was Therese Stone, who had two hits and drove in two runs, while for the Stingers, Vicky Walker had three hits in four trips.

At Topaz Park, Lakehill Meats hammered Strathcona 20-6 in a Lower Island Association intermediate "B" women's league game.

Metchosin golf playoff goes eight extra holes

Sudden-death playoffs were required to decide titles in last weekend's Metchosin Open golf tournament.

After finishing regulation play in a deadlock with par 68s, John Gee of the host club and Dave Donaldson of Gorge Vale battled through eight extra holes before Donaldson dropped a long birdie putt to win the Open crown.

Ellis Peters of Metchosin won a playoff for the handicap championship in faster fashion, defeating Ardmore's Ron Treleaven on the first extra hole after both had carded net 57s in the 18-hole event.

Argentines win

GRANDE PRAIRIE, Alta. (CP) — The Argentine national volleyball team defeated Canada 15-8, 15-12, 13-15 and 16-14 Tuesday night in the last of four exhibition matches scheduled between the two teams in Alberta. Canada won the first three.

Germans held to tie

Times News Services

West Germany was held to a scoreless draw by Greece in European soccer championship play in Turin on Tuesday night, but the team was guaranteed a berth in the final before the ball was put into play.

A 1-1 draw between Czechoslovakia and the Netherlands in Milan earlier in the day assured the West Germans of topping Group One, whatever the outcome of the game with Greece.

But the Greeks, though finishing bottom of the table, had the satisfaction of becoming the first team here to take a point from the powerful West Germans.

Czechoslovakia edged into the playoff for third and fourth places with three points and a superior goal difference to the Dutch, who also had three points.

The Greeks and West Germans both had narrow escapes in a match, which produced a strange Greek tactic of trying to set an offside trap almost on the half line.

Among other chances which went astray; the Greeks almost pulled off a spectacular score when Christos Ardizoglou crashed a 25-metre shot off the post.

Ace striker Karl-Heinz Rummenigge missed two of West Germany's best chances, most of which were set up by the talented Hans Mueller. He was just wide of an open goal from 35 metres and later headed weakly off target.

U.S. Yacht leads

PLYMOUTH, England (AP) — Phil Weld of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., remained in the lead Tuesday in the transatlantic single-handed yacht race, race organizers reported.

With more than half of the 3,000-mile race completed, the 65-year-old Weld, sailing his 51-foot trimaran Moxie, was being chased by Kazimierz Jaworski of Poland in a 56-foot monohull, Spaniel II.

Among the frontrunners in the race to Newport, R.I., which began here June 7, are Nick Keig of Britain in Three Legs of Man III, Walter Greene of the United States in Chaussettes Olympia, Gustaaf Versluys of Belgium in Tyfoon VI and Olivier de Kersauson of France in Kriter VI.

Frenchman Eugene Riguidel, who lost the lead to Weld on Sunday when his 52-foot trimaran was damaged, dropped to eighth place, race organizers said.

Of the 88 yachts that started the race, six have dropped out.

Big triactor payoff sets meet record

It was a big payday for three lucky ticket holders Wednesday at Sandown Raceway.

The 10th-race triactor paid a meet-record $5,536 for a $2 wager.

Longshot H.T. Brook, with only one second and a third in nine starts this season, romped home with Greg Tonkin at the reins and paid $36.40 to win.

Shyster Max, with three thirds in nine starts, placed second and paid $13.80 while Holridge Gringo, with a fifth, fourth and two sevenths in four starts, came third and returned $4.30.

The massive triactor made up for several low exactor payoffs, including a meet low of $7.30 in the seventh.

Driving leader Joe Hudon collected three victories to push his total to 33 wins in 18 racing days. Keith Quinlan, who trails Hudon by six wins, earned one victory.

Three horses posted lifetime career record times during the day — Saska Wind in the fourth, Cedarwood Champ in the fifth and Sweet Angie in the featured ninth.

Racing action resumes Thursday with the parade to the post at 5:20 p.m.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT . . .
By WALTER CHRISTEN

How does your garden grow? Toss tiny radishes, greens and all, into your salad. Or simmer them in a little chicken broth and toss with tiny peas.

To cut down on cooking odors, drop a whole, unshelled walnut into the cabbage pot.

When is a baked potato a diet meal? When you fill it with cottage cheese and top with alfalfa sprouts. Satisfying, low-calorie supper.

Sprinkle parmesan cheese on buttered wedges of pita bread. Bake at 450 degrees for 5 minutes (Watch it!). Souper with soup.

Hard to believe that elegant saucisson en croute appetizer is just a package of crescent rolls around a 10-inch pepperoni. Brush sausage with beaten egg yolk and roll in flour before wrapping with dough. Bake 15-20 minutes at 350 degrees.

Opening lead — ace of hearts.

How is it possible to change an indifferent bridge player into a good one? It's not easy, but one way to do it is to try to convince him that learning the elementary principles of bridge is far more important than learning complicated bidding conventions or learning complicated plays that come up once in a blue moon.

For example, take this case where South gets to six clubs. West leads the ace of hearts, East following suit, and continues with the jack of hearts, East discarding a diamond as South wins the heart with the king.

Declarer can count eleven tricks at this point, and realizes that he can score a twelfth trick by taking a successful finesse in either spades or diamonds. But if that is as far as declarer's thinking goes, he is not trying hard enough. The fact is that declarer is sure to make the slam if he plays correctly, and he does not have to rely at all on the element of luck usually associated with a finesse.

At trick two South learns that West started with seven hearts, and he also learns at the same time — from East's failure to ruff the second heart lead — that West was dealt all four missing clubs. Eleven of West's 13 cards are thus accounted for, and declarer's only remaining task is to compel West to reveal his holding in spades and diamonds.

Accordingly, declarer plays four rounds of trumps and cashes dummy's king of diamonds. After West follows suit, declarer next plays dummy's king of spades. When West follows suit again, the picture of West's original holding is complete. He obviously started with seven hearts, four clubs, one spade and one diamond.

The rest of the play is easy enough. Declarer cashes dummy's queen of hearts, discarding either a spade or a diamond, and takes a finesse in the other suit, knowing for certain that the finesse will succeed.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"The same as all Molly's parties, not much fun," said Lorna, shrugging out of her coat. "I amused myself checking the way people were dieting."

Grant shook his head. "As regards eats? You alway say she serves only coffee and crackers."

"That's right, but I mean cream and sugar," his wife replied. "One-fifth of us took both, two-thirds had no sugar and three-quarters took no cream. I forget exactly how many took neither, but it was around forty."

How many had their coffee black?

Court told of argument over $70

An argument over a contemplated $70 labor charge to fix a broken window preceded a stabbing which resulted in the death March 17 of a 31-year-old Saanich woman, B.C. Supreme Court was told Tuesday.

Denis Barry McFadden, 29, of Sidney, charged with first-degree murder after the death of Marion Barbara MacKay, was testifying on his own behalf on the seventh day of his trial.

He told the jury he didn't know the first time he went to her Old West Saanich Road house he had stabbed her but he knew it when he returned, collected his tools and a carving knife, wrapped her body in a bedspread, put her in his car and drove home.

McFadden denied intending to kill her or to hurt her and denied sex was on his mind rather than fixing a broken window.

He also denied the stabbing was over the broken-window argument, saying he didn't know the reason.

The defence was to continue its case today calling McFadden's wife and a psychiatrist.

McFadden said he came to Canada from Northern Ireland, where he was a member of the Ulster Defence Association, in 1974.

He had a call from the Blue Army home maintenance referral agency about MacKay's basement flooding from a leak in a hot water tank, phoned her and told her how to operate the stop cocks, and made arrangements to fix the leak about 10 or 12 days prior to March 17.

But when he arrived at the house, he said no one was there, a note said the leak had been fixed, and he was "pretty angry" so he smashed a small window and went home.

After returning home and hearing MacKay had called apologizing for not being home, he wrote a note offering to fix the window and pinned it on her door.

McFadden said he was in a shocked and frightened state at the time because of a visit by the RCMP over an allegation of defrauding a previous employer of $25,000 and a Saanich investigation of an allegation of wilful damage, which resulted in no charge, in which a number of his tools were taken.

He also said he had a fear of police from his days in Northern Ireland but agreed he has never been mistreated or hurt by police in Canada.

On March 17, he said, he had just returned from a visit to Vancouver where he got married and was expecting the RCMP to come, but they didn't and when he phoned them about the fraud matter, they said they were in the middle of their investigation.

He considered this the final straw, that he had to face the matter but couldn't, and wanted to go back to Ireland.

Then MacKay phoned, after 5.30 p.m., and she wanted him to fix the window. He said he would take measurements that night and install it the following day.

While at her house, he said he heard her answer the phone, make arrangements to meet someone, and say she'd only be 30 minutes because the plumber had arrived.

McFadden said he checked the hot water tank. His mind was in a terrible state, he said, thinking about the RCMP. She showed him the small broken window in the bedroom.

He said he took the carving knife, which he used because Saanich police had taken his other knives two weeks earlier in connection with the wilful-damage investigation, and a pair of pliers from his tool box.

McFadden said he offered to buy the glass if she paid the labor charge of about $70 but she said that was awfully high and an argument started.

She was shouting and demanding another estimate and didn't want him to do the job. He pushed her and she said she would complain to the Blue Army and phone police if he didn't leave the house.

He said she grabbed his leg and pulled him as he knelt on a chest of drawers by the window and he fell against a large window.

"The next thing I know I was on the floor and I just really honestly don't know what happened," he said.

"I've tried to think about what actually happened . . . I must have run from the house because I was in the car and it was dark."

Driving home he said he got flashes in his head and "I just couldn't believe what was happening to me." There was blood on his hands.

In his house, he said it was like a dream. He then drove back to the MacKay house and called her but there was no answer. Inside, he saw his toolbox on its side and she was lying dead on the floor.

"Panic set in again," he said. "I didn't know what to do or where to turn. Everything went through my mind. I just couldn't believe this had actually happened."

He said people would know he was in the house so he panicked and knew he had to get rid of her and all the evidence. He said he took her clothes off and wrapped her in the bedspread, throwing some of her clothes out of his car as he drove home.

At his house, he said he wrapped her in blankets and then in a tarpaulin, tied it up and put it in his boat.

After his wife went to bed, he said "I seemed to come to my senses a bit. It all started coming back to me. I thought I had been asleep and it was a nightmare and I'd just woken up. I went to the boat and the tarpaulin was there and I still couldn't believe it and I drove to her house and police cars and policemen were there." He returned home and waited for police.

McFadden said one statement he gave police was an error. He said in his statement he took her shoes off. In court, he said he didn't.

In cross-examination, he said he didn't know how many times he stabbed her until police told him. He said he didn't know he had stabbed her until he went back the second time.

Asked if he was saying the reason for the stabbing was an argument over a broken window and a $70 labor charge, he said "no, I'm not. I don't know the reason."

He agreed his fear of the RCMP fraud investigation was that it was justified.

Asked if he was considering returning to his homeland in spite of his feeling about the police there, he said he and his family planned to go to Southern Ireland.

He positively denied telephoning Merle Szpradski at 9 p.m. March 17, about three hours after he said he was first at the MacKay house, and having a conversation with her.

McFadden denied he was misleading police by telling them he threw the carving knife into the ocean at Sidney wharf rather than Roberts Bay where it was found. He said the wharf was "in my head" but agreed there is no wharf at Roberts Bay.

He denied mixing truth, lies and imagination in his statement to police to cover an indecent assault on MacKay, saying he had been truthful all along.

He agreed his statement said in part he was "taking measurements" of the broken window. In court, he said he was in the bedroom "to take" measurements.

He also agreed he was wrong when he said in his statement he was standing on the dresser. In court, he said he was kneeling.

He denied the larger window was broken by her; "I know I hit the window." He could not explain a very small portion of flesh found outside the window.

McFadden denied suggestions put to him that he knew exactly when and where he stabbed her.

"If I could remember it might give me peace of mind," he said.

He denied switching his story about her shoes because blood which was found inside the shoes couldn't be there if they were worn.

McFadden said it wasn't his intention to borrow a car with a hitch March 18 to dump MacKay at sea and that only the arrival of Saanich police prevented this.

He said "no" when it was suggested he forced MacKay to disrobe at knife point and that was why there were no holes in her clothes.

He also replied "no" when it was suggested she tried to jump out of the window and he pulled her in and that was when it broke, pulling her across the floor and then stabbing her.

In the midst of one of his denials, the soft-spoken McFadden said in a barely audible voice "my wife is the most beautiful woman in the world and I worship the ground she walks on."

Hydro asked for breakdown on line cost

Central Saanich council will ask B.C. Hydro for a cost breakdown on underground installation of a high-voltage power line proposed for the Saanich peninsula.

Mayor Dave Hill said today the request follows a petition signed by residents urging an underground line from the Saanich-Central Saanich boundary to the Keating Crossroad power station.

He said Hydro has supplied only rough cost estimates — $450,000 for an overhead line compared with $3.5 million for one underground.

"Some of the residents feel that (latter) figure is way too high," Hill said.

Red ink halts Adirondack

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Adirondack — the deficit-plagued New York City-to-Montreal passenger train — will make its final run Aug. 2, Amtrak officials said.

The decision stemmed from a failure of Amtrak and New York state officials to reach agreement on a continued subsidies for the route, which lost $1.8 million last year.

Soil decision irks aldermen

Saanich aldermen are unhappy over a decision by a Crown prosecutor to stay proceedings in charges laid by the municipality against Blenkinsop Valley resident Mrs. Mary Reinstein.

Reinstein, of 1345 Mount Douglas Cross Road, was charged under a Saanich bylaw prohibiting soil removal from her property.

Development manager William Weir, however, reported crown prosecutor Richard Isaac directed the stay of proceedings because of technical problems of proof.

A direct appeal should be made to Attorney-General Allan Williams to review the prosecutor's action, several aldermen suggested.

Ald. Sandy Noel said he has twice seen material being taken from the Reinstein property.

"She (Reinstein) has taken no action at all on restoring the land. It's an ungodly mess," he said.

Municipal solicitor Chris Nation said he had been unsuccessful in efforts to have the crown reopen the case and take the matter to court.

"I've discussed it with three officials of the attorney-general's ministry; tried in vain to persuade them to re-lay the charges, but they say this is impossible until there is fresh evidence," he said.

Reinstein's property, on the southeast corner of Blenkinsop and Mount Douglas Cross Road, is considered an important flood plain.

An intensive investigation by municipal staff was ordered by council last year after complaints were received from the Saanich Greenbelt Association about the sale of topsoil from the Reinstein property to individuals and the municipality of Oak Bay.

Aldermen ordered a letter be sent to Oak Bay Mayor Doug Watts informing him of "this flagrant breach of a Saanich bylaw."

Mountie beat brother in 1979, youth assaults RCMP officer

The younger brother of a man beaten up by a Sidney RCMP officer was given a jail sentence Tuesday in Victoria provincial court for assaulting a Colwood RCMP constable.

Erik Walter Krenbrink, 17, of 601 Raynor, pleaded guilty to assaulting a peace officer and consuming liquor in a public place.

Krenbrink's 23-year-old brother, David Dean, was the victim of a May 1, 1979, police beating in front of the Sidney RCMP detachment and 29-year-old Grant Bottrell was convicted of two counts of assault causing bodily harm and sentenced on May 29, 1980, to three months in jail following a county court jury trial.

In the younger Krenbrink's case, crown counsel Don Laughton said the incident began about 6:20 p.m. April 16, when Const. Stanley Hall was dropping his daughter off at Centennial Park.

Hall saw Krenbrink drinking from a bottle of beer and ordered him to pour it out. When Krenbrink became abusive, Laughton said, Hall tried to arrest him and a struggle ensued. Krenbrink missed on several attempted kicks but connected on a punch to Hall's head which caused a blackened left eye and lacerations.

While Hall was still down, Krenbrink jumped on a motorcycle and left the scene, court was informed.

Defence lawyer Chris Considine said Krenbrink turned himself in to police after learning there was a warrant out for his arrest.

Laughton alleged a juvenile record including convictions for possession of marijuana, breaking and entering, minor in possession of liquor, common assault, causing a disturbance, carrying a dangerous weapon, driving without due care and attention, driving without a valid driver's licence, driving without valid insurance, and misuse of licence plates.

After recalling that he was presiding at Bottrell's preliminary hearing, Judge Blake Allan called the attack a "brutal assault of a peace officer in the execution of his duty."

When Considine said sending Krenbrink to jail would put him in with the "wrong crowd," Allan rebutted with a reminder that a police officer was sent to jail for three months when Krenbrink's brother was attacked.

"I have to mention it because many people will have it in mind," Allan stated.

In answer to Considine's suggestion of a face-to-face apology to the officer by Krenbrink, Laughton said Hall did not want any personal contact with the youth.

"It was a violent attack of a peace officer in the execution of his duty," Allan said. "Liquor is no excuse for that kind of conduct at all.

"There's altogether too much abuse of police officers. I object to it as a citizen and as a judge.

"Probation is not appropriate at all."

He handed out a 12-day jail sentence on the assault charge and also placed Krenbrink on six months probation. One of the conditions of the probation was that Krenbrink not enter any premise where liquor is sold.

On the Liquor Control Act offence, Allan handed out a suspended sentence and another six-month probation period.

Before the judge

A 19-year-old youth who broke a plate glass window Tuesday morning was jailed for 10 days, placed on eight months probation and ordered to pay $481.34 damages.

Perry Wahnschaff, 345 Simcoe, pleaded guilty to mischief causing wilful damage.

Court was told Wahnschaff punched out a window at the Fairweather shop, 910 Government Street, about 12:45 a.m. Laughton said Wahnschaff was in a rage when arrested by Victoria police and had to be taken to hospital for treatment to a cut thumb.

Duty legal aid lawyer Vincent Giles said Wahnschaff and his common-law wife had been drinking earlier in the evening at the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans club at 1001 Wharf and were walking home when they were joined by a friend who began "hustling" the woman. The three of them got into an argument and Wahnschaff broke the window, Giles said.

A 42-year-old man who missed a May 28 trial was given 10 days to be served after he finishes a 14-day term for impaired driving.

Darryl Frederick McCoy, 485 Island Highway, pleaded guilty to failing to appear in court. His guilty plea was struck June 12 by Judge Lorne Pearce after McCoy tried to explain he was in Vancouver General Hospital at the time because of his alcohol problem. A check of Vancouver General Hospital failed to show any record of McCoy's admission or release.

Giles said he made a check and found that McCoy had been admitted to the Burnaby General Hospital.

McCoy was given a 14-day term for impaired driving last Thursday.

"People are entitled to peace and quiet in their neighborhood," Allan said before levelling a $150 fine on a 17-year-old Metchosin youth.

Keith Allan Horwood, 3964 Happy Valley Road, pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance by shouting on Olympic View Drive.

Laughton said Colwood RCMP went to a beach party about 8:30 p.m., April 18, off Olympic View Drive after complaints of noise.

The crowd was dispersed but Horwood and others hung around the street, court was told. Officers again ordered them to disperse but Horwood began yelling loud, profane and sarcastic abuse at the police, Laughton stated.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were Ronald Leslie Pietrzykowski, 29, of 2057 Townley, $500, and Daniel Martin Richardson, 18, of 2701 Forbes, $150.

Women get life in stabbing

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two women who stabbed a man to death were sentenced to life imprisonment Tuesday when a B.C. Supreme Court jury rejected their plea of self defence.

The jury found Mary Evangeline Basarabas, 35, and Jenny Spek, 19, guilty of the second-degree murder of Tristano Falbo, 57, of Vancouver.

The women told police Falbo had dinner with them at his home, gave Basarabas $20 and then wanted to have sexual intercourse with her.

Spek said Basarabas rejected Falbo and the two women were about to leave when Falbo placed an arm around the neck of Basarabas. Spek said she grabbed a wine bottle and hit him on the head.

Both women said they then stabbed Falbo.

Residents beef to APC

Local residents opposed two development projects proposed for their neighborhoods when developers made their pitch before Victoria's Advisory Planning Commission Tuesday night.

Condominium owners in the Savoy at 777 Blanshard protested that a six-storey apartment-commercial building proposed for 821 Burdett would block the light and destroy the view from their suites.

Wencore Management Ltd., of Vancouver, wants a change in zoning from the present Cathedral Hill Precent apartment zone to a new zone permitting five floors of residential use and professional offices on the main floor.

William Leoppky, who lives in the Savoy, said his purchase of a condominium there was a good investment.

"But shutting out the light from the north side isn't going to do us any good. I'm still strongly opposed to any development of that property."

Some 30 residents of the building earlier this year opposed another project for the property, which city council blocked by refusing to rezone.

Kathleen Berwick, who lives on the fifth floor of the Savoy, said anyone below that level would be in darkness if the building proposed by Wencore goes ahead.

"Perhaps if we could have something aesthetically pleasing with some landscaping between the buildings."

J.R. Clapp, represeting the developer, said the development would be several feet lower than the maximum allowed under the present zoning.

Another group of homeowners came to speak against a commercial-apartment project proposed for the corner of Haultain and Shelbourne, incorporating the old shoe repair store which has been there for decades.

Several residents said parking problems on Haultain were already severe and the new project would make it worse.

"Why inflict the shops on the taxpayers of this area?" asked Robert Reedman, 1644 Haultain.

Jean Martin, 1649 Haultain, said: "The parking is terrible. I go home after work and find customers from the shoe store in my driveway."

The APC votes Thursday night on these two applications and another 10 which aroused little controversy at its public meeting.

COLORFUL FLOWER BASKETS which grace Victoria streets will appear Thursday morning. Task of hanging the 650 baskets starts at 11 p.m. tonight and should take crews about eight hours. City nursery supervisor Edgar Dash, inspecting this year's batch, says season has been one of the worst for growth and that Schizanthus, which contribute much of baskets' color, are very late.

City zaps 'free' parking

Employees of Victoria Press Ltd. at 2621 Douglas and government office workers in the ministry of communications next door who have been parking for free on a vacant lot in back will soon have to pay for the privilege.

City council's land management committee voted Tuesday to barricade the 92-by-126 foot lot at Hill Street and Ross Lane until a pay parking lot can be established.

Ald. Bob Wright said the undeveloped city property has been used mainly by Victoria Press employees as free but illegal parking. The committee decided the city should start charging for the privilege.

The lot must be paved and drains installed before a parking lot can be opened. It would cost about $14,000 to provide 36 parking slots, city land commissioner Joe Elkins estimated.

Robbins Parking said there would be about $500 a month gross revenue, with its share 22 per cent if the lot had metered parking or 12 per cent with monthly paid parking.

At the same time, they also decided to sell a 190-by-132 foot parcel of city property nearby at Hillside and Ross Lane. Upset price will be $350,000.

Owners of the Scott building at Hillside and Douglas want the property for a parking lot. Now it is a fenced grassy field, and people who work in the area eat lunch or sunbathe there.

Bids sought for Rainbow site

The city of Victoria is again advertising for sale a 1½-acre waterfront development site in Victoria West.

Bids are being solicited on the Rainbow site again because one of the conditions in the original offer for sale two months ago has been removed.

There won't be a road going through the property connecting Robert and Russel streets, and as a result the city's legal advice is that there must be another tendering procedure under the new conditions, Ald. Bill McElroy said today.

Residents of the area protested the plans for a road, which was destined to be part of a longer scenic waterfront drive.

The city received offers as high as $600,000 for the property earlier this year. A council committee had narrowed down the bidders to two developers, rejecting the high bid from a developer who proposed a condominium time-sharing project. Council has rejected time-sharing in that part of town.

Zoning on the 1½-acre site permits only 21 townhouse-style units. The remaining 1½ acres on the harbor side is to be reserved as a public park.

Offers for the property must be in by 4 p.m. next Thursday.

Armed with spoons and spatulas, instructors at the New England Culinary Institute are ready to give their first students food for thought. When the region's first culinary school begins classes Monday in the kitchen of Montpelier, Vermont's Tavern Motor Inn, 30 to 40 apprentice chefs will be thrown into a two-year study of professional cooking. John Dranow, the institute's vice-president, says students will have control over what goes on the plates at the city's largest hotel. "This is the best way to train a chef," he said. "Many just learn in a simulated kitchen." Borden Avery, the owner of the Tavern, said he sees the deal from another angle. "People will be coming in just to taste the cooking. It will be good for business."

Frost

David Frost believes in having a good breakfast. The British television host awoke in a Miami hotel recently and decided to order room service. The menu: poached eggs, a jumbo steak, two bottles of Perrier water and, to top it off, a bottle of Dom Perignon champagne. The cost: $175.

Sci-fi writer, space buff and Omni magazine executive editor Ben Bova says we'd be a lot better off if we thought more of the future and less of pizza. He told the U.S. National Energy Foundation in New York the public blows $7.5 billion a year on pizza — 1.5 times more than the NASA space budget. Says he, "I'm Italian and I love pizza, but our priorities are in the wrong order." Bova said he has a wish to retire in space "and possibly live to be 200 where there's no pollution, no muggers ..."

The man who tends cows for the Queen says she has a taste for unpasteurized milk and a special cream cheese got from the milk of her 100 cows. On tour in Canada and the U.S. to promote Jersey cattle, herdsman Alan Cowdrey revealed the unusual royal taste in a Toronto interview. The Windsor Castle employee, who said he often discusses the herd with the Queen, said the Royal Family sells any milk it does not use to a nearby dairy.

Jackie Gleason has a diet tip for all you weight-watchers out there. "You eat anything you want but you must also drink two quarts of scotch a day. You don't lose weight — but you forget that you're fat."

New York actress Tanya Roberts will be the newest Charlies' Angel.

Dear Abby:

My sister has a pair of twin boys, age 10, and two little girls, 7 and 6. She also has a beachfront summer cottage. Sis lets her boys swim in the nude when it's very hot, but she insists that the girls wear swimsuits at all times.

I have two children, a boy, 9, and a girl, 8, who would enjoy a vacation at the lake, but I don't like this nude boy bit.

When I discussed it with my sister, she said it was healthier for little girls to be brought up with no secrets about what little boys look like.

I half-jokingly asked her if she thought Dear Abby would agree with her, and she said she was sure you would because you were very broad-minded. I said I'd ask you. So, what do you say?

Wondering

Dear Wondering:

I may not be as broad-minded as your sister thinks I am. Ask her, if it's healthy for little girls to be brought up with no secrets about what little boys look like; why isn't it equally as healthy to bring up boys with no secrets about what little girls look like?

Dear Abby:

Our son who just turned 17 and his girlfriend who is 16 have been going steady for 10 months. They insist that they are "in love," and we know for a fact that they have been sleeping together. (They admitted it.)

We feel that they are not mature enough for such a serious relationship.

We have asked that they agree to a six months' "cooling off" period, during which time they will both date other people but not each other.

At the end of this period if they still feel the same about each other, they may then go out with each other.

The kids think we are being very unfair to ask this of them. What do you think, Abby?

Concerned Parents

Dear Concerned:

You are not being "unfair," but you are being unlreastic. Most teen-agers who think they are "in love" and are sexually active will find a way to be together no matter what.

As concerned parents you should make sure your children know all the facts in order to prevent unwanted pregnancy and VD.

And please don't feel that giving them information is the same as giving them permission.

It's not: it's simply being realistic and lovingly protective.

Feastmaker Mitchell . . . all the moves to make a meal with friends at home as nice as dining out

Relax, the klutz is off tonight

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Cooking is a dirty word to some — the unfortunate kitchen klutzes who manage to turn anything edible to an unpalatable mess.

For those of us with searing memories of burnt entrees and soggy deserts, people like Deborah Mitchell are a godsend when you want to have people over for a decent meal.

Deborah has just opened a catering service for people who don't like to cook, are too busy — or both.

And this reporter can attest her home cooking tastes much better than anything found frozen in the freezer of the local supermarket.

Deborah is a 24 year-old Victoria native who started her business, called Moveable Feast, several weeks ago.

She has no formal training, just a deep love of cooking and — being the oldest of five children — lots of experience.

"I just like cooking and seem to be always doing it," she explained recently as she prepared a feast in my home for a group of friends.

Deborah, who found office jobs boring, got the idea for her business when she started cooking regularly for two friends.

"I thought, if there's two, there must be more," she said.

Starting a business is never easy, but Deborah says she prefers working for herself and considers getting the operation off the ground a challenge.

Meeting new people is a bonus, says the gregarious cook.

For $8.50 an hour (there is a $15 minimum) she comes over and whips up a meal. The client supplies the food and the utensils.

Vegetarian cooking is one specialty, and Deborah says she cooks all nationalities, from Greek to East Indian.

And if clients don't have anything specific in mind, Deborah will plan the menu and provide the recipes.

She'll cook for a wide variety of functions from picnics to dinner parties.

The service includes dishwashing, serving the meal and tidying up afterward.

Dressed in a bright pinafore, Deborah was neat, cheerful and efficient as she prepared shrimp and vegetable quiche, Caesar salad and a mouth-watering cheesecake — in my primitive and ill-equipped Fairfield kitchen.

Several years living in Bamfield, where dinner parties start with six guests and grow without warning to 15 or 20 people, Deborah quickly learned to cope with sudden orders for large groups.

So far her best clients have been the two friends. They have grown addicted to her cooking and now hire her twice a week.

Deborah believes her biggest potential market is young single, professional people who are too busy to cook.

Her dishes are tastier than most restaurant fare and less expensive, she says. Best of all, they're served at home, where guests can relax and have a good time.

"So far, I don't think I have any competition."

Hired for three hours, Deborah produced an excellent meal for four hungry people — with plenty of leftovers for snacks the next day.

All we had to do was eat and enjoy ourselves. As hostess I was free to be with my company without the distractions of serving or tacking my ego to each bite of my recipes.

Deborah works from her home and can be reached by calling 727-2626.

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Surgery for cancer of the larynx and vocal cords has enjoyed a high percentage of success. These excellent results are undoubtedly due to the fact that hoarseness, an importat symptom, is recognized early. And when treatment for cancer is instituted early, successful cures are more readily obtained.

One of the most difficult problems associated with laryngectomy (removal of the larynx) is its effect on speech. Many patients have been taught to speak by swallowing air and then "burping" it up with words. In some instances the speech is quite remarkable.

Now Dr. Mark I. Singer, a professor at Indiana University, has come up with a new approach to this problem. He and his associates have developed a clever operation by which they create a tunnel into the esophagus from the site of the removed larynx. The esophagus is the tube that carries food from the mouth to the stomach. Out of more than 70 patients who have had laryngectomy, there has been excellent voice success in about 90 percent of the patients.

Neck surgeons who have carefully evaluated this technique are extremely enthusiastic about it, for it helps to quickly return these courageous laryngectomized patients to productivity.

Dear Doctor:

Sufferers from Parkinson's disease were given the proverbial "new lease on life" when L-dopa and its allied drugs were first used to combat this debilitating illness. Yet sometimes L-dopa loses its effectiveness aganst advanced cases.

Dr. Abraham N. Lieberman, professor of Neurology at the New York University School of Medicine, has been using two new chemical agents in an experimental study. These drugs, pergolide and lisuride, were given to victims of Parkinson's disease. The initial studies are sufficiently exciting as to induce other doctors to try the new drugs. As always, the groups of physicians who are studying these new drugs are cautious about being too optimistic until their efficiency and safety have been completely established.

Dear Doctor:

The progress that is being made in the treatment of burns is spectacular. There is no letup in seeking new ways to increase recovery from serious burns.

Now a group of biomedical research workers has created a new low-cost temporary skin substitute to protect burned areas. Dr. Paul Y. Wang, of the University of Toronto, has been able to produce new and healthy skin following the use of the new hydrogel.

Cooking for company

partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

A cook's life is made up of small milestones. The first hollandaise sauce that doesn't curdle. The first flaming dish without too much sizzle or fizzle and the first company dinner.

Send out invitations for, oh, six. And since tonight is a company dinner let's set the time a little after the usual, say 7:30.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: salt, pepper, Tabasco, Dijon mustard, curry powder, garlic, wheat germ, butter, coffee (and accompanying cream and sugar).

The Shopping List: Two ducks (under five pounds each); two boxes frozen peas; one-and-one-half pounds of mushrooms; canned chicken broth (three cups); wild rice (one cup); condensed milk; graham cracker crumbs (one cup); raisins; chocolate chips (one small package); celery; one onion; two lemons; one orange; one small jar honey, red wine.

The starting point for this recipe was a talk I once had with a Milwaukee food editor. She told me that the most popular recipe she ever wrote was a simple roast chicken basted with a combination of honey, lemon, mustard and curry powder. If you try it, you'll understand why. And a nice bonus: It works as well with ducks. Perhaps the most common way of preparing duck is a l'orange—with an orange sauce. This is equally impressive and quite a bit less work.

Prepare in Advance: The brownies.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Mix together the can of condensed milk, a cup of graham cracker crumbs and a quarter of a cup of wheat germ. Stir in a large handful of raisins and a small package of chocolatge chips. Butter the inside of a rectangular baking dish 9x13 and pour in the batter. Bake for exactly 30 minutes, remove from the heat and cut into small squares. Set aside.

Also to Be Prepared in Advance: The ducklings. If frozen, they should be thawed.

And the duck basting sauce. Mix together in a small bowl a half cup of honey; three garlic cloves minced; a couple of shots of Tabasco; a tablespoon of Dijon mustard; the juice of two lemons and one orange; two to three tablespoons of curry powder.

Set aside.

And the vegetables. Rinse the mushrooms and cut off the tips of the stems. Slice them thinly. Allow the green pease, if frozen, to thaw.

And the other vegetables for the wild rice. Cut five celery stalks into tiny pieces. Chop up a small onion. Set these aside.

5:30 P.M.: Preheat oven to 360 degrees.

First, the wild rice casserole. Rince the wild rice in cool water before beginning. (Caution! Don't allow any of it to slip away — you won't, if you remember what you paid for it.) Take a casserole pan and butter the inside surface. Add two-and-a-half cups of chicken broth. And a cup of wild rice. Now the celery, the onion and, if you feel like it, you can swipe a small handful of the sliced mushrooms. Put the cover on the casserole and pop it into the oven.

5:45 P.M.: Prepare the ducks. Take the curry-honey-lemon-orange mixture and smear it generously over — and inside — the birds. When you're placing them in the roasting pan, put them on a metal rack — above the reach of the melted fat.

6 P.M.: Place the ducks in the oven with the wild rice casserole. Most of your work is done by this time. Greet the company. Smile. Have a drink. Oh, c'mon, relax a little. And every 20 minutes or so get up and baste the ducks with fresh coats of the honey mixture. Every now and then pierce the skin with a fork to let more fat escape. You may want to pour away the fat if there's too great an accumulation.

7 P.M.: Remove the rice casserole from the oven and keep it warm until ready to serve. If it shows signs of being too dry, add some of the remaining chicken broth. Now's a good moment to open the bottle of red wine and let it "breath" for a while.

7:20 P.M.: Raise oven temperature to 450 degrees to put a nice crisp finish on the ducks. Continue to baste.

And, in a skillet over medium heat, melt half a stick of butter. Add the sliced mushrooms and, in a couple of minutes, the peas. A little salt and pepper and cook it until the vegetables are just tender. Lower heat.

7:30 P.M.: Cut into one of the ducks to make sure that it is cooked to your liking. Check the rice. Plug in the coffee maker.

Your last challenge will be to carve the ducks. You'll need a sharp knife and a steady hand. Simply cut the duck into quarters, then serve beside the wild rice. And the peas. And the wine, followed in due time by the coffee. And the brownies. And a profound sense of relief.

question & answer

Q. Do you recall the drink known as a pousse-cafe? It used to be much admired in fancy bars around the country.

A. Indeed it was, and I doubt that there are very many bartenders today who could describe it in detail. It consisted of several liqueurs in rainbow colors that were poured into a very small glass. The important thing in preparing the drink was to understand the specific gravity of each liqueur before adding them. When properly added, the liqueurs did not blend but rather remained in bright layers.

Here is one version, the liqueurs to be added in the precise order in which they are listed: Pour one part of each of the following into a small glass the size of a double or triple thimble: grenadine syrup, yellow chartreuse, creme d'Yvette, white creme de menthe, green chartreuse and Cognac.

Q. When I was a child my parents served a drink called a "shrub." As I recall, it contained fruit juices and rum. Do you know how this drink is prepared and also where the name came from?

A. There are many versions of shrubs. A basic, nonalcoholic shrub is made by combining the juice of fruit or berries with sugar to taste. This is simmered briefly, stirring. You then add about three tablespoons of white wine vinegar for each cup of juice and chill. It is then served over ice.

A shrub with alcohol is made by blending light or dark rum with the rind of lemon or orange. This is allowed to stand for two days or longer. For a lemon shrub you would then add one cup of lemon juice for each quart of rum that is used, about two cups of sugar simmered briefly with four cups of water. The mixture is then bottled for a month or so before serving. It is served over ice. The word "shrub," incidentally, derives from the Arabic word "shurb," meaning a drink.

Home-canned food plans begin now

Capture nature's goodness by planning now to can fruits and vegetables harvested from the garden or selected at the peak of perfection from the market to provide eating enjoyment long after the growing season.

Besides the convenience and varied taste treats of having home-canned foods on hand, there is a sense of self-satisfaction everytime you serve them. Sharing with family and friends is all part of the process.

Here are some tips to help achieve top-notch canning results with simple everyday utensils. Start by selecting only ripe, firm fruits and young tender vegetables. The higher the quality and the shorter the time between garden and canner, the better the final product.

It is particularly important to wash all fruits and vegetables thoroughly. Garden soil contains harmful bacteria that is difficult to destroy and causes spoilage. Wash small quantities of food under running water in a colander. The colander holds food in the sink and keeps dirt from resettling. Also, it will not allow fruits and vegetables to soak or stand in water, robbing them of valuable water-soluble vitamins.

For top quality look and taste, home canned goods must be properly prepared. Color changes can occur if air bubbles are not removed from the jar before processing. Also, air can cause the liquid level to lower in the jar after processing. To avoid this, gently work a flexible Rubbermaid spatula around the inside of filled jars to release the air bubbles, being careful not to break up pieces of food.

The most important step in canning is the seal. The seal preserves the food after processing. Chipped jar rims, bent lids or bands can prevent a jar from sealing. Also, jars filled too full will not seal properly. Use a funnel when filling jars with syrups, juices or other liquids.

Label home-canned products carefully with contents and date. And store in a dark, dry location where temperatures are below 21°C. Home-canned products lose quality rapidly when stored in a warm spot.

Here are the 10 most asked questions on food preservation:

Q. Must vegetables be blanched before freezing?

A. Yes. Blanching vegetables before freezing inactivates the enzymes that cause off flavors, loss of color, texture changes and loss of nutrients. If a vegetable is properly blanced and held in storage at — 18°C (0°F) or lower, the nutritive value will be almost equivalent to that of the same vegetable cooked fresh.

Q. Can the amount of sugar in jam recipes be reduced?

A. If the amount of sugar in jam recipes is reduced the resulting product will not a be jam. It will likely be runny and may spoil. Sugar in jam has an important function to prevent the growth of bacteria, mold and yeast. Both sugar and the acid from fruit are needed to combine with pectin to form a thick, gelled jam.

Q. Why do vegetables have to be home canned in a pressure canner?

A. Unlike fruits vegetables do not have enough acid to discourage the growth of Clostridium botulinum. Vegetables must be processed under at least 70 kPa (10 pounds pressure) to have a temperature high enough to completely destroy Clostridium botulinum.

Q. Why must home canned vegetables be brought to the boil and simmered 10 minutes before even tasting?

A. Boiling vegetables before even tasting is a precaution against botulism. Spoilage by many different bacteria, molds or yeast often results in very obvious changes in the appearance or odor of food. Unfortunately Clostridium botulinum can grow in food, especially home canned vegetables and not make any noticeable change. One small taste of a food contaminated with botulism toxin could be fatal. Boiling the food destroys the botulism toxin.

Q. Do jars of pickles and relishes have to be processed in boiling water bath?

A. Tests done at Agriculture Canada concluded that processing was not necessary for pickles and relishes. Processing made pickles less crisp, paler in color and poorer in flavor. Processing did not improve their keeping quality.

Q. What can I do to protect my frozen food when the power fails or the freezer breaks down?

A. During a power failure or mechanical breakdown, open the door as little as possible. A full freezer will keep food frozen about 2 days; a half-loaded one probably not more than a day. If the delay is expected to be longer than a couple of days move the food to another freezer or a commercial freezing plant.

Q. Why do home canned tomatoes have to have citric acid or reconstituted lemon juice added?

A. Tomatoes are borderline in acid quality. Some have enough acid, some do not. There is no way to determine how much acid tomatoes have at home. Citric acid or reconstituted lemon juice are added to the jar or can of tomatoes to make sure there is enough acid. Tomatoes may then be processed in the boiling water bath or at 35 kPa (5 pounds pressure).

Q. Where can I get information and tested recipes for freezing, canning, jam and pickle making?

A. Write or call: Agriculture Canada, Ottawa, K1A 0C7, or Extension Home Economist, Ministry of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Victoria, V8W 2Z7.

Q. Can the amount of salt or sugar be reduced in pickle recipes?

A. Sugar and salt combine with vinegar in pickle products to set up conditions that thwart the growth of bacteria, mold and yeast. Sugar and salt are also needed to develop the characteristic crispness of pickles. Neither sugar nor salt can be reduced in pickle recipes.

Q. What jars can I use for home canning, jams, jellies, pickles or relishes?

A. For home canning only mason canning jars may be used. Commercial jars such as salad dressing or peanut butter jars do not keep good seals, may not result in a safe process and may crack during processing. Any jar that can withstand sterilizing in a 100°C (200°F) oven or boiling water can be used for jams, jellies, pickles and relishes. Relishes may keep their color better if home canning jars are used. Protect the lids of pickle jars from rusting by stretching a layer of plastic wrap over the mouth of the jar before the lid is screwed on.

Home canning becomes easier with helpfuls for washing, draining and bottling

Croutons

Brush eight slices of French or Italian bread with olive oil, about half a teaspoon for each. Run under the broiler until golden brown on one side. Turn and broil until brown on the second side. Rub each crouton with a cut clove of garlic.

Yield: 8 croutons.

Mint spreads

There are not too many spots where mint will not spread so it is helpful to keep the plant in a tub or planter before it gets out of control.

Each Bossy serves a dozen

There are about 1,900,000 dairy cows in Canada, roughly one for every twelve consumers. On the average these cows produce approximately 4,800 Kgs each per year, or about 400 Kgs for each of the eight consumers they must provide with milk.

Canadian consumers annually account for 4.49 Kgs of butter per capita, along with 3.77 Kgs of Cheddar Cheese and 3.33 Kgs of other cheese varities. They consume slightly over 100 litres of milk and cream while ice cream, largely depending upon the weather, runs about 12 litres per capita. Cottage cheese consumption is slightly over 1 Kg per capita and yogurt is now at about two litres. Canadians still consume significant amounts of evaporated milk .

Depending upon the type one Kg of cheese requires from 10 to 11 Kgs of milk. Butter manufacture requires a ratio of 23.4 to 1. In the butter making process skim milk powder is a by-product (about two Kgs of powder for every Kg of butter produced).

Dairy foods are obviously essential to the Canadian diet, and for good reason. About 70% of our calcium comes from milk and milk products along with important quantities of vitamin A, vitamin D, riboflavin, thiamin and important trace minerals.

Italian dishes are snappy

the 60-minute gourmet

A friend and neighbor recently observed that I have often offered recipes in this column that are basically Italian or variations on basically Italian dishes.

While it is true that I have not spent a great deal of time in Italy — perhaps a month in all over a period of years — I have many good friends who are Italian and with whom I've spent numerous hours in the kitchen.

It is also true that, perhaps more than in most cuisines, excellent Italian dishes lend themselves to the premise of this column, that good food can be prepared in less than an hour. And one reason for this is that veal scaloppine is a basic ingredient for many Italian dishes.

One of the most interesting things about scaloppine is that it blends well with so many other ingredients, be they vegetables, herbs, spices or other meats like ham or prosciutto.

One of my favorite scaloppine dishes bears the odd name of saltimbocca. I say odd because the word literally translates as "jump in the mouth." I am not at all certain why it is called that, but I have had many versions of this dish. The most basic is simply a combination of thinly sliced scaloppine attached (with a toothpick) to a thin slice of prosciutto with a sage leaf sandwiched in between. The "package" is cooked quickly in butter or butter and oil and served.

One of the best versions of the dish is that of Eduardo Giurici. His saltimbocca consists not only of scaloppine and prosciutto but a fine Marsala sauce plus a garnish for each serving of half a hard-cooked egg.

Giurici's version is also served on a bed of escarole sauteed quickly in olive oil and flavored with a touch of garlic. Two saltimboccas per person.

SALTIMBOCCA

- 8 thin veal scaloppine, about 1 pound
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- 6 tablespoons butter
- 2 hard-cooked eggs, peeled and cut in half lengthwise
- ½ cup Marsala wine
- Escarole, Italian-style (see recipe)
- 4 thin slices ham, preferably prosciutto
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley.

1. Put each piece of veal between plastic wrap and pound lightly with a flat mallet. Flatten lightly without breaking the meat.

2. Sprinkle the veal with salt and pepper to taste. Dredge lightly on both sides in flour.

3. Heat the oil in one or two large skillets (if two skillets are used, you may have to add a little more oil). When the oil is piping hot, add the veal. Cook quickly until golden brown on one side. Turn and cook on the other side until golden brown.

4. Meanwhile, heat the butter in a separate skillet. As the meat is cooked transfer it to the skillet with the butter.

5. Arrange the hard-cooked egg halves over the veal. Sprinkle the Marsala over the meat. Cover the skillet and cook about four minutes. Uncover and cook about two minutes longer or until the sauce is slightly thickened.

6. Arrange equal portions of hot escarole over each of four plates. Cover each serving of escarole with two slices of veal, slightly overlapping. Cover each serving with a slice of prosciutto. Top each serving with half a hard-cooked egg. Spoon pan sauce over each serving. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

ESCAROLE
Italian-style

- 1 head of escarole, 1 pound
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- 4 cloves garlic, each cut lengthwise into three pieces
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

1. Pull the leaves from the center core of the escarole. Discard the core. Rinse the leaves in cold running water and drain.

2. Bring enough water to boil to cover the leaves when they are added. Add the escarole leaves and stir down so that they cook evenly. Let simmer about five minutes. Drain well. Squeeze to extract excess liquid.

3. Heat the oil in skillet and add the garlic. Cook until it starts to brown. Add the escarole, salt and pepper. Cook, stirring, until heated. Discard the garlic pieces and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

Neighborly pot-luck for you?

By KATE McQUEEN

Eating out often was becoming too expensive and cooking for one was no fun until a pair of busy neighbors decided to share their spares. One loved to bake almost anything; the other could brew a scrumptious stew, soup or sauce. So they traded single servings and ate happily ever cheaply . . . Got a friend with food spares to share?

$24M Canada art deal has U.S. patrons in tizzy

United Press International

A group of American art patrons have begun a fight to keep a world-renowned Chicago collector from selling his rare photographs — valued to as much as $24 million — to the Canadian government.

Arnold Crane, a Chicago lawyer who began collecting photographs by and of famous people decades ago, is in the process of working out a deal to sell his extensive collection.

Bill Doan of Fort Dodge, Ia., who describes himself as an acquaintance of the reclusive Crane, calls the collection of "a piece of America," and insists the works belong in the states.

"Selling it would be like carving the signatures out of the Declaration of Independence and selling them separately at a souvenir shop," Doan said in an interview Tuesday. "Crane has a museum of photography as well as a museum of our history."

Doan said many patrons — particularly those of the New York Metropolitan Art Museum and the Chicago Art Institute — are frantically trying to drum up interest and money to buy the collection to keep it in the country, but have been virtually ignored by the U.S. government.

"I've gotten a cold shoulder all the way to the White House," he said.

Doan, who has had several photographs on display in major museums across the country, said few museums can match Crane's collection in value, quality, or volume.

Crane reportedly owns 60,000 prints — including rare, high-quality daguerreotypes from the 1830s and extensive collections of such noted photographers as Man Ray, Walker Evans, and Bayard, a Frenchman who pioneered early photographic techniques in the 19th century.

His deal with the Canadians has run into problems. The National Gallery of Canada is waiting for Revenue Canada — the government's budget agency — to decide whether it can take a sizeable tax deduction if it buys the collection.

James Brocoman, curator of photography at the National Gallery of Canada, estimated the collection's worth from $6 million to $24 million — $6 million if sold as a complete collection and up to $24 million if sold individually.

"The national gallery would be given considerable international stature if this collection came to Canada," Brocoman said. But government tax collectors probably won't look at in that light, he conceded.

"They don't see it as a cultural gift. They don't understand the cultural value of the gift. Revenue Canada thinks someone is looking for a loophole. The gallery is putting a case together."

Under the law, Revenue Canada has five years to decide whether the collection is taxable.

Brocoman said negotiations have been ongoing for a year and if a decision is not reached soon, "the deal is off."

"If it's lost, we will have lost our one big chance to give the National Gallery considerable international stature. It requires a top level decision," he said."

Constitutional talks hit road

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal and provincial cabinet ministers decided Tuesday to kick off a four-week, cross-country round of constitutional talks July 7 in Montreal but reached no agreement on which of 12 key issues they will discuss first.

Following a week in Montreal, the ministers will spend a week each in Toronto and Vancouver. A fourth week of discussions leading up to a crucial meeting of Prime Minister Trudeau and the 10 premiers Sept. 8 to 12 likely will be held in Ottawa.

The justice or intergovernmental affairs ministers from the 11 governments agreed Tuesday to limit their discussions to the 12 items identified last week at a meeting in Ottawa between Trudeau and the premiers.

However, they decided to include talks on an amending formula for a new and truly Canadian constitution under the more general heading of bringing the 113-year-old British North America Act home from the British Parliament.

Most of the premiers rededicated themselves last week to the principle that the constitution — a statute of the British Parliament — should not be brought under the control of the Canadian Parliament until a formula is found to amend it.

Currently, unanimous agreement between Ottawa the provinces is necessary before the constitution can be altered.

Ottawa studying patents on bugs

OTTAWA (CP) — Science Minister John Roberts told the Commons Tuesday a special science committee is studying the commercial opportunities as well as the potential impact of biotechnological research, including genetic engineering.

The minister was responding to Progressive Conservative Gary Gurbin who represents the Ontario riding of Bruce-Grey, who wanted to know if the government had considered the possible dangerous effects of a U.S. Supreme Court decision to allow scientists to patent living organisms created in a laboratory.

Biotechnology basically involves the manipulation for human purposes of the biological reactions of micro-organisms.

The U.S. court ruled in a 5-to-4 vote that these "bugs" may be included in U.S. law allowing patents for someone who "invents or discovers any new or useful process, machine or manufacture of composition of matter."

The decision brought good news to the National Research Council which had filed two patents on genetic engineering techniques with the U.S. patent office.

Saran Narang, a council biochemist, and colleague Ray Wu of New York's Cornell University had just received a file number from the U.S. patent office on their cloning technique for human insulin which they plan to put into commercial production at Toronto's Connaught Laboratories.

The council had also filed a second patent on Narang's work on the development of a special joining or "linker" molecule used to fit the new material into bacteria.

Narang is currently out of town and could not be reached.

But Claude Bishop, head of the council's biological sciences division, said Tuesday he is pleased with the Supreme Court decision.

Bishop said the council had applied for patents in the U.S. so Canadian developments would be protected in a wider market where genetic research exceeds efforts by scientists here.

Film festival for gays

MONTREAL (CP) — A gay film festival, believed to be the first of its kind, will be held here the last week of June with filmmakers from France, Germany, Great Britain, the United States, Japan and Canada participating.

Coinciding with the festival will be a display of erotic works by Quebec artists and two marches promoting "gay pride" through central parts of the city, organizers said Tuesday.

Feds give minor prod to rental construction

By DAN TURNER
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Caught between a crisis in the housing industry and a mammoth budget deficit, Public Works Minister Paul Cosgrove has announced a "modest program" to stimulate the construction of low-cost rental housing.

He said he had authorized the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corp. to boost the number of rental units that can be built under National Housing Act social housing programs from 25,000 to 30,000.

At least for the moment, Cosgrove said, the increase will be aimed at Vancouver — where the rental vacancy rate is a miniscule 0.2 per cent, and Toronto — where the vacancy rate is 1.1 per cent.

The program falls far short of what the housing industry has been calling for to stimulate starts in a market badly battered by high interest rates in the winter and spring.

The Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada recently called the housing downturn "by far the worst since the Great Depression".

Contacted immediately after Cosgrove's statement, HUDAC president George Frieser said the federal government's response was "a drop in the bucket."

"Social housing certainly has its place, and we recognize its social need, but we feel it falls far short in providing the type of accomodation we need in our cities for all income groups."

HUDAC has also predicted that housing unit starts will decline to 160,000 this year, compared to 197,049 in 1979, 227,667 in 1978, and 245,000 in 1977.

After making bullish noises about helping the housing industry soon after he took over his portfolio, Cosgrove has had to pull in his horns at the direction of Finance Minister Allan MacEachen, who is faced with a $14.1 billion budgetary deficit this year.

Pension break for spouses

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The Canada Pension Plan will be amended to allow the income of spouses employed in family-owned unincorporated businesses to be considered pensionable earnings, Monique Begin, federal health and welfare minister said Tuesday.

"This change to the Canada Pension Plan, along with a similar amendment to the Quebec Pension Plan, could make as many as half a million Canadian women eligible to make contributions to the public pension plans," the minister said in a speech at the opening of the 27th Canadian conference on social development.

Begin said the federal government would continue its reform of the pension system by seeking advice from whose who administer and benefit from the program during a previously-announced national pension conference that may be held as early as this fall.

"Beyond that conference we will be working closely in consultation with our provincial colleagues in developing co-ordinated plans for the reform of the system as a whole, and then putting those reforms into place."

The amendment is in line with Ottawa's intention to allow wages paid to wives in unincorporated family enterprises to be deducted as business expenses under the Income Tax Act.

While Begin's speech dealt mainly with a review of pension plans, an address by Gordon Fairweather, head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, focused on the kind of country Canadians should expect to live in during the coming decade.

Fairweather said issues of major interest would include human dignity, personal privacy and Canada's response to refugees.

QFL declares war on bank

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Federation of Labor has launched a province-wide offensive against the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for what president Louis Laberge claims are anti-union tactics by the bank.

Laberge told a news conference Tuesday that the 320,000-member federation is appealing to its affiliates, members and the public to withdraw "hundreds of millions of dollars worth of accounts" from Commerce branches.

The decision to boycott the bank came several weeks after the Commerce locked out eight employees at two small Quebec branches who had been staging walkouts to press for a resumption of contract negotiations.

The Commerce was the object of a similar nationwide withdrawal threat by the Canadian Labor Congress last fall for its refusal to discuss union security at certified branches. The bank backed down and granted compulsory union dues checkoff at the branches before much of the $850 million the CLC said its affiliates and members could withdraw was actually removed.

The bank was also the target last November of a severe ruling by the Canadian Labor Relations Board, which condemned its anti-union tactics.

A CLC spokesman last week said the 2.3-million-member national labor organization would wait to see the QFL's boycott plans before acting.

A Commerce spokesman said later the bank had no comment on the QFL campaign, except to say he couldn't "see this action having any material effect on negotiations."

Slump can be a killer: study

LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — The economic slump is making people physically sick and could lead to 19,443 additional deaths in Michigan, including more suicides, murders and heart attacks, a report said Monday.

The paper, prepared by the University of Michigan for a recent meeting of Gov. William G. Milliken's human services cabinet, said the physical and mental problems of unemployed workers may be the tip of an iceberg of suffering in their families.

It warned repeated layoffs can start workers on a downward spiral which eventually leaves them unfit for employment.

"Clearly the current Michigan crisis has all the worst elements present to an extent unprecedented since the Great Depression," it said.

The paper was based on research performed by M. Harvey Brenner for the congressional Joint Economic Committee. Brenner found a 1 per cent increase in unemployment can lead to increased deaths, heart attacks, cirrhosis of the liver, suicides and homicides.

Based on national estimates, the U-M paper concluded Michigan "could conceivably" see as many as 19,443 deaths linked to the current economic situation.

There could be 10,120 heart attacks, 247 deaths from cirrhosis of the liver, 460 suicides and 324 homicides, the paper said.

People at the bottom of the economic ladder, those with weighty responsibilities and the previously unemployed are most vulnerable, the study said. It said the person most affected is not necessarily the one who lost the job.

"Behind every individual pathology which is observed is the iceberg of the family suffering from the initial experience of job separation, consequent struggles to adjust to the loss of resources and the subsequent negative outcomes — mental and physical illness," it said.

Physical and emotional illness also can impair an unemployed workers' future job prospects, the study said.

"So while we may assert on the one hand that a certain amount of unemployment of the counter-cyclical type is essential to reduce inflation we must also factor into our calculations the real possibility of producing through this strategy an ever larger group of hard-to-employ persons who become part of our increasing fraction of structurally unemployed persons," it said.

Housing slump 'near bottom'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — New housing construction slumped for the fourth consecutive month in May, falling to its lowest point since the last recession five years ago, the U.S. Commerce Department said Tuesday.

In a second report, the department said the personal income of all Americans rose a slight one-tenth of 1 per cent or $3.1 billion in May to a seasonally adjusted $2.07 trillion.

The nominal May increase wiped out a comparable decline in April and left personal income where it stood in March.

The number of new houses started throughout the country last month stood at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 920,000, down a sizeable 11.5 per cent from April and 49 per cent behind the building pace of a year ago.

"It's about as bad as it's going to get," said Michael Sumichrast, economist for the National Association of Homebuilders. "I think we're near the bottom of this housing recesion. Things should begin turning up in a couple of months."

Building permits, an indication of future homebuilding activity, were authorized at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 806,000 in May. This was up 2.2 per cent from April, but still 51 per cent below last year's pace.

By region, only the northeast showed a gain in new housing starts, up a modest 1.6 per cent.

New housing construction fell by 21.8 per cent in the north-central region, 2.5 per cent in the west and 6.7 per cent in the south.

U.S. consulate in Bolivia looted

LA PAZ (AP) — Right-wing Bolivian peasants demanding the ouster of the U.S. ambassador looted the American consulate and the Bolivian-American Cultural Centre in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, early today, official sources here said. There were no injuries.

The sources said 50 to 100 peasants — some carrying automatic weapons — rifled files, broke furniture and carted off typewriters and other equipment. No Americans were in the buildings at the time.

The looters were described as members of the ultra-conservative minority Bolivian Socialist Falange party, which observers said is trying to promote a military takeover of Bolivia and which has staged co-ordinated disorders throughout Santa Cruz, 650 kilometres southeast of here.

Heavy gunfire was heard in some sections of that city during the night and about 300 soldiers moved in after dawn, the sources said.

"The city is completely shut down; the soldiers are asking everyone to stay inside," said one source who asked not to be named.

The Falangists continued to hold most Santa Cruz radio stations, apparently with the co-operation of the military. The stations broadcast martial music and appeals for the U.S. ambassador's ouster and for the army to stage "a patriotic uprising."

On Tuesday, the peasants shot their way into the office of Santa Cruz Gov. Walter Pereira, wounding him seriously.

Similar disorders in Santa Cruz culminated in a military coup nine years ago and Tuesday's attack led to fears among authorities in the capital that the military may try to seize control of the government and prevent general elections scheduled for June 29.

"We are extremely worried about what has happened in Santa Cruz and we appeal for tranquillity," a government minister said after an emergency meeting of the cabinet.

Bolivia has been in a state of flux since a military coup last November. Coup leader Col. Alberto Ntusch Busch reluctantly turned the government over to the national Congress after violent street fighting protesting military rule left 200 dead.

Guards' chief waits for word

Times News Services

At last report Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr was still deciding whether or not to accept the resignation of Abu Sharif, the commander of the Iranian Revolutionary Guards, the main security force of Ayatollah Khomeini's revolution.

Sharif, who has only held the post for a month, announced his resignation Tuesday after allegations some corps members had exceeded orders.

Bani-Sadr said later he would be discussing the matter with the guards today.

In a brief statement, the corps commander said "exclusivism and sectarianism" had frustrated his aim of setting up a force to aid the world's oppressed and pursue Iran's revolutionary course.

Sections of the guards are known for their strong support of Islamic hardliners, especially the militants holding the 53 American hostages.

A message from Ayatollah Khomeini to a guards' rally in Tehran on Monday ordered the guards to obey their commanders strictly, especially Bani-Sadr, armed forces commander-in-chief.

In other developments:

— Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said the former shah, now in Cairo, has a high temperature and is being treated by Egyptian and U.S. doctors.

— The official Radio Tehran reported that Iran's oil minister conferred in Tehran with a Yugoslav delegation hoping to buy "large amounts" of oil and natural gas in exchange for supplying spare parts and other petroleum co-operation.

— A team of Iranian experts, headed by economy and finance ministry supervisor Reza Salimi, is in Moscow for high-level economic talks.

Oregon urges volcano aid

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — Gov. Vic Atiyeh asked President Carter Tuesday to declare Oregon a federal disaster area to offset "the immense havoc" brought on by erupting Mount St. Helens.

Atiyeh said federal emergency disaster and recovery funds were needed, especially by Portland, which "is suffering serious economic distress."

Silt and debris into the Columbia River have greatly slowed ship traffic, and as a result Port of Portland is suffering.

Port authorities estimate revenue losses at $5 million to $7 million through August because larger ships are unable to traffic the clogged Columbia. If wages lost by longshoremen, Teamsters and others are added in, losses through June come to $13 million.

Pot pills to ease cancer?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States government, widely expanding the allowed medical uses of marijuana, may soon make pills containing a derivative of the drug available to cancer patients.

The prescription pills would be sold through hospital and cancer centre pharmacies to help chemotherapy patients avoid the violent side effects.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse is rushing to make a million pills containing the marijuana derivative THC. The first 500,000 are to be ready by July 1, and if approved as predicted, the National Cancer Institute says they might be dispensed for therapeutic use by early fall.

Dr. John Macdonald, the institute's associate director for cancer therapy, said the pills might help up to 100,000 cancer patients avoid the often-violent nausea and vomiting that frequently accompany chemotherapy.

Nobel Betty fined $67 for fracas

LONDON (AP) — Betty Williams, Nobel Peace Prize-winner and co-founder of Northern Ireland's Peace People movement, was fined $67 today after pleading guilty to disorderly behavior at London's Heathrow Airport.

The court heard that Williams, 37, had banged a ticket desk with her fists after missing a flight home to Belfast May 1.

She was arrested after using abusive language and trying to push past a policeman to board a plane which was just leaving.

Defence lawyer Sheron Bedell-Pearce said Williams had been travelling in North America giving talks on behalf of Amnesty International:

"She had had no sleep for 36 hours . . . She became distraught and behaved in a way that was utterly uncharacteristic."

Afghan head tries suicide

NEW DELHI (AP) — The puppet president of Soviet-occupied Afghanistan, Babrak Karmal, was stopped by his security guards in an unsuccessful attempt to kill himself last Friday, Radio Pakistan was quoted today by Indian news agencies.

The broadcast monitored here quoted reports from Afghanistan as saying Karmal was a virtual prisoner of his Soviet advisers and his personal staff, including his cook and his driver, are Russians.

The report could not be independently confirmed. Several diplomatic sources here said they had not heard the report from their embassies in the Afghanistan capital of Kabul.

An insurgent group based in Peshawar, Pakistan, reported today a Soviet armored column fought its way out of an ambush by Afghan rebels in the Sultani Valley with the help of pro-government Afghans. The column was trapped two days in the valley, about 72 kilometres west of the Afghan-Pakistani border, said a spokesman for the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan.

The spokesman said 25 insurgents were killed before the fighting ended Sunday. He quoted participants as saying they saw 50 Soviet troops and pro-regime Afghans wounded or killed during the battle.

Western diplomats in Islamabad reported that anti-communist Moslem rebels are assassinating members of Afghanistan's ruling pro-Moscow party at an average rate of 10 a day in Kabul.

Most of the assassination victims are described as low-ranking members and officials of the Khalq (People's) party. But Afghan exiles said the rebels also have killed politicians' relatives with no connection to the party.

The sources said the victims include supporters and opponents of President Babrak Karmal, installed when the Soviets began pouring in tens of thousands of soldiers to fight the rebels in December.

Assassination attempts on Khalq party officials also have been reported in at least two important provincial capitals, Kandahar, 460 kilometres southwest of Kabul, and in Jalalabad, 120 km east of the capital.

In Jalalabad, some party members are reported to have moved their wives and children to tents near local army units because of the rebel attacks.

Meanwhile, Western diplomats reported a recent slackening of Soviet military convoys entering Kabul, even though air traffic remains heavy. They said rebel tribesmen fought Soviet soldiers near Jagatu in Wardak province, about 130 km southwest of the capital during the last week.

Harper's bites the dust

Times News Services

MINNEAPOLIS — Harper's Magazine, the United States' oldest monthly, will cease to publish with its August issue — a victim of inflation and the present recession.

The Minneapolis Star and Tribune Co., Harper's parent firm, Tuesday announced the demise of the respected 325,000-circulation magazine of literature and current affairs, founded in 1850.

Over the years, serializations of novels by Dickens, Thackeray and Trollope and other English literary greats have appeared. It was the first to buy a story from Mark Twain.

Willie Morris, the editor who resigned from Harper's almost a decade ago in a dispute that prompted many of the literary men to quit with him, traced the magazine's collapse back to 1971, blaming then-chairman John Cowles Jr. and other business officers:

"They got on computers early. They were operators in a modern age who could never believe that great writing was the only hope for the survival of a magazine such as Harper's. . . It was a failure of character."

State saves Sido

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — Sido, a 10-year-old collie, bounded up the courtroom steps and jumped into the arms of its temporary guardian Tuesday after the state governor, legislature and a judge had agreed Sido should live.

"This is a great day for animals' right to life," said the guardian, Richard Avanzino, director of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The collie was doomed to die when her owner, Mary Murphy, died of an overdose of sleeping pills last December and requested in her will that Sido "be immediately put to death." She feared no one would take care of the dog.

But the SPCA refused to carry out Murphy's instructions and a court battle began.

In a last minute reprieve, Probate Court Judge Jay Pfotenhauer received a telephone call Tuesday from the office of Californian Gov. Jerry Brown and was told the governor had signed a bill sparing the dog's life.

The state Senate and Assembly had earlier approved the bill. Pfotenhauer, about to give his ruling, said the court hearing was no longer needed.

Avanzino, who had kept the dog in his home since Murphy's death, said there are 300 applicants for Sido.

Pfotenhauer said Sido's future home should be chosen by Pets Unlimited, a pets' home which had originally given Sido to Murphy and which is the main beneficiary of her estate.

Silkwood roommate disappears

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — Police are investigating the reported disappearance of Sherrie Ellis, who just completed a book on the late nuclear worker Karen Silkwood, as a missing person case but are not ruling out foul play.

Ellis, 27, who lived with Silkwood in November, 1974, when both suffered radiation exposure at their apartment, was last seen Sunday, the day she was to have completed a manuscript of a book titled "Armed and Dangerous."

A collaborator on the book, Dr. Clifton Warren, said Ellis' friends told him she had the third draft of the manuscript with her when she was last seen. The first disappeared in the mail and the second was rejected by a publisher.

World's arms race costing $1M per minute

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The arms race costs the world $1 million a minute, UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim said Tuesday, but offered cautious hope the build-ups will ease.

"Humanity today possesses the means to destroy all civilization and indeed organized life on our planet," he said. "At the same time, it is unable to feed and clothe the world's poor. This is an intolerable situation."

Waldheim told an international conference on disarmament, called by non-government groups associated with the United Nations, to encourage their people to press governments for disarmament.

"We are entitled to feel a sense of cautious hope, if not optimism," he said. "The hope arises ultimately from the special nature of the human mind. We possess qualities of compassion, idealism and responsibility."

"The world's combined weapons . . . suffice to kill every man, woman and child 10 times over. The arms race continues at the pace of $1 million per minute."

World military spending in 1980 is expected to exceed $500 billion, according to a report by the Stockholm International Peace Research Insitute said.

The report, circulated at the conference, said the figure in 1979 reached about $480 billion.

NATO and Warsaw Pact countries accounted for about 70 per cent of this, while 15 per cent came from the Third World, the report said.

Faulty $100 chip signalled attack

Washington Star

WASHINGTON — A dime-sized piece of hardware costing less than $100 probably caused two false alarms last week that simulated the signals of an incoming missile attack, the Pentagon announced Tuesday.

Gerald P. Dinneen, assistant secretary of Defense for communications systems, explained at a press briefing that the faulty piece of hardware — called an integrated circuit — was contained in another device, a "communications multiplexer," which takes information out of the giant computer of the North American Air Defense Command and puts it on communications lines to various military command headquarters.

"There could be other computer-generated errors," warned Dinneen, who explained that his office is exploring ways to improve the "error detection and correction abilities of the NORAD communications system," which is located inside a mountain at Colorado Springs, Colo.

Dinneen asserted that the error was recognized within two to three minutes by "the apropriate people in the military command centres" who were looking at the radar monitors and could see that there were no incoming missiles, despite what their teletypes from NORAD said.

Dinneen said that the system was specifically designed to catch such errors by using redundant ways of detecting and communicating news of an attack. Despite the use of computer hardware, he added, the ultimate reliance is placed on human judgment.

Dinneen said that while his investigation on ways to improve the system is continuing, information at NORAD is being rerouted through different electronic channels.

An integrated circuit is a small silicon chip which is a miniaturized version of a large switching station. Dinneen said that failure of the circuit caused an "erroneous bit" of electronic information that printed a series of numbers indicating a large number of incoming missiles.

Although the Strategic Air Command began warming up the engines of several B-52 bombers as the result of the false signal, Dinneen said that the move was only a precautionary measure.

He said that there was no alert of any missile or bomber system intended to put them in a higher state of readiness to respond to such an attack. Dinneen said that, while his investigation is continuing, he felt that the faulty chip could not have been detected by more thorough maintenance of the NORAD communications system.

Polynesia nuke test suspected

WELLINGTON, N.Z. (Reuter) — France probably exploded a medium-sized nuclear bomb in the South Pacific early Tuesday, a spokesman for the Wellington Seismological Observatory said today.

A New Zealand department of scientific and industrial research station at Rarotonga in the Cook Islands recorded seismic wave patterns consistent with a bomb test at the coral atoll of Muroroa in French Polynesia, he said.

The Rarotonga readings indicated a test of about 20 kilotons, he said.

Afghan tribe eyes Alaska

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — An aging Afghan chief is seeking approval from the U.S. State Department to bring his nomadic tribe of 1,200 persons, their yaks and yurts to Alaska.

The Anchorage Daily News says Rahman Qul, 70, is the leader of the Kirghiz tribe that fled to Gilgit, Pakistan, following the Soviet-backed coup in Afghanistan in 1978.

The tribe originally lived in the Soviet Union but fled to China after the Bolshevik Revolution and then to the Pamirs in Afghanistan, says state department official Ron Lorton.

Lorton said the tribe wants to leave Pakistan and has expressed interest in Alaska.

He suggested the huge tribe should seek refugee status rather than visas to enter the United States.

An official in the State Department's refugee division said Qul's request probably would be overshadowed by pressures to accept refugees from Cuba, Haiti and Asia.

The company will receive the money for producing the Tonight Show for the 3-year period, as well as at least one other series a year and several other projects.

Safeway prepares for layoffs

VANCOUVER (CP) — Safeway officials have served notice to about 4,000 retail clerks that enables the company to lay them off seven days from now.

The step was taken in preparation for a possible distribution centre strike this week which would shut down food supplies to its 88 B.C. food stores.

Shelves in many of Safeway stores in B.C. will be empty by Saturday and most stores will be shut by early next week if about 800 packers, clerical workers and warehouse people, members of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, follow through on a strike vote, said Safeway spokesman Georgina Bullen.

Union officials last week asked the food chain to remove perishables from its warehouses by midnight Tuesday night.

Strike action would halt distribution from Macdonald's Consolidated warehouses in Victoria, Burnaby, Dawson Creek, and Lucerne Foods Ltd. milk and ice cream departments and Empress Foods Ltd. tea and coffee in Vancouver.

Safeway officials refuse to comment on strike issues or negotiations but union spokesman Jon Squire says the issue is equal pay for men and women doing similar work.

Under the old contract, which expired more than two months ago, women clerical and plant workers start at $9.59 an hour while warehousemen start at $10.15, he said. Also at issue is the pension plan.

Bullen said the company is optimistic negotiations between company and union will continue this week and that workers, who are in a legal position to strike, will not take job action while talks continue.

Meanwhile, talks are continuing between Canadian Allied Manufacturers Wholesale and Retail Union and Kelly Douglas, supplier for Super Valu stores. Union officials, representing about 600 warehouse and office workers, have had three meetings with management. Their contract expired May 31.

Poultry plant cuts 100

VANCOUVER (CP) — One hundred workers at the financially-troubled Maplewood Poultry Ltd. turkey processing plant in Abbotsford have been given layoff notice effective Friday night, company president Bryan Hambley said Tuesday.

Hambley said the notice was posted because Maplewood received news that financial support by the provincial government for the Fraser Valley plant was to end this week.

He said he had expected the support to continue until the end of the month, giving the federal Foreign Investment Review Agency time to consider a renewed bid by Maplewood to sell out to American interests.

Maplewood shut down its Abbotsford processing plant a month ago after failing to find a Canadian buyer, but was given a short-term reprieve when the provincial government supplied a $500,000 loan guarantee to the B.C. Turkey Marketing Board to allow it to contract out some work to Maplewood.

Thieves steal furniture from foyer

Two men looking for tasteful furniture found three chairs, two pictures, a lamp and two small carpets to their liking in the foyer of the apartment building at 1435 Elford Place.

They loaded the goods onto a blue pickup truck overnight and drove off.

Oak Bay police stopped a truck shortly before 2 a.m., and the apartment building manageress identified all the items aboard as belonging in her foyer.

The two men were to appear in court today charged with theft over $200.

$2M coke shipment seized

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three men have been charged after RCMP seized 6 ½ pounds of cocaine from a pleasure craft in Vancouver's Coal Harbor on Tuesday night.

Estimated street value of the drug is about $2.5 million.

Charged with conspiracy to traffic in cocaine and possession for the purpose of trafficking are: Clement Arthur Moyen, 41, of Vancouver, Mario Fernandez, 36, of Lima, Peru, and 21-year-old Dominique Anthony Gaeta of Seal Beach, Calif.

They were to appear in provincial court today.

CP walkout at an end

VANCOUVER (CP) — Yard crews have ended their walkout at CP Rail yards in Port Coquitlam and Vancouver, but the workers are still upset about manpower reductions which they say are compromising safety.

Freight moving in and out of Vancouver on CP Rail was halted early Tuesday when crews walked out here and in Port Coquitlam, just east of Vancouver, to protest safety conditions.

Members of the United Transportation Union decided to stop work after an accident Monday in which a worker lost a leg while switching railway cars.

Another worker died in November in a similar accident.

Body on Malahat is missing man?

Skeletal remains found in the Malahat area Tuesday morning may be those of an Oak Bay man who disappeared after leaving his workmates in the spring of last year.

Pat Norton, of Shawnigan Lake, who runs a logging operation in the Malahat area, found the skeleton just north of the Malahat Chalet midway between Highway 1 and Saanich Inlet.

James Mortimer Duprau, who once lived at 2627 Dunlevy, Oak Bay, was working with three other men on Finlayson Arm Road on April 16, 1979 when he became ill.

Duprau, an epilectic and thought to be generally in poor health at the time, headed for a nearby cabin to rest.

When his companions returned to the cabin, there was no trace of Duprau.

Mac-Blo mops Alberni oil spill

A cleanup crew from MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. worked until the early hours today cleaning up a spill of Bunker C oil in the Alberni Inlet.

A company spokesman said the spill occurred early Tuesday morning, probably from a valve malfunction on a recovery boiler in the pulp mill.

The oil was discovered in the basement at 8 a.m. and was later found to have passed through a sewer into the inlet toward the company's deepsea dock.

The spokesman said most of the oil was trapped in a log boom.

The company's cleanup barge Abater and a Super-Sucker were used to clear up the spill.

The spokesman was unable to say how much oil reached the inlet.

Don McCulloch, district supervisor for the department of fisheries in Alberni, said today an investigation is under way.

Disillusioned punk star quitting

CALGARY (CP) — Warren Kinsella says the punk-new wave scene in Calgary isn't fun any more.

Kinsella, a full-time university student and part-time punk singer who plans to quit the Calgary scene this summer, says punk has lost its youthful innocence.

He says it has turned into a fashion show and a vehicle for violence, supported by bored middle-class kids with little or no interest in the music.

"When I leave, I'll have some reservations but not too many because I don't like what it's become," Kinsella said in an interview. "It's so contrived, it makes me sick."

Kinsella, 19, is lead vocalist, bassist and chief lyric writer for the Hot Nasties, a four-man punk band formed "mainly for fun" in the fall of 1978.

The name came from a soft-porn film that was showing at the time at a local theatre.

Kinsella goes by the stage name of Nuclear Age. The other members are lead guitarist (Ras) Pierre Schenk, rhythm guitarist Wayne (The Sane) Ahern and drummer (Just Plain) Tom Edwards.

Their "official" one-page biography, composed by Kinsella, says all the band members still live at home and "one of them even gets an allowance." They have performed at local community centres, college dances, at a downtown bar and opened for the British new-wave group 999 at a recent concert at University of Calgary.

It was during one of these performances, at a violence-marred dance in February at a community hall, that Kinsella decided the band's punk-is-fun message might not be getting through as intended.

"There was an incredible amount of destruction there," he said.

Composer dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Nolan, a New Brunswick native who composed the western song classics Cool Water and Tumbling Tumbleweeds, has died of an apparent heart attack at the age of 72.

Nolan — with cowboy film star Roy Rogers and Tim Spencer — formed the Pioneer Trio in the early 1930s and they changed the singing group's name to Sons of the Pioneers in 1934.

Nolan had been on a Newport Harbor boat outing with a son and daughter when he became ill Monday while returning to his Los Angeles home.

In addition to Tumbling Tumbleweeds and Cool Water, Nolan wrote more than 1,000 western, gospel and country songs.

SUCCESS Through SELF HYPNOSIS

For the past 20 years Mr. DeSilva's method of training in Self Hypnosis has taught thousands of people how to control weight, smoking, memory, and concentration, attitudes, pain, confidence.
One day's training could change your life — look better, be more energetic, increase memory, be more calm, take off pounds, take off inches, lose anxieties, become more creative, sleep better, develop motivation, lose fears, develop salesmanship, develop ESP, control your mind, be healthier, be less depressed — anything that depends on your own efforts.
Hypnosis Works! It releases the dynamic power of the mind. Through DeSilva's seminars his knowledge and voice brings out the hidden powers that lie dormant within you. His methods will give you the power to be or do whatever you want.
What His Graduates Say: Mrs P. C. (housewife): "I want to thank you again for helping me before my surgery — it was a very big help. Thank you again . . ."
Mr. J. L. (retired Naval Officer): "Years of dieting didn't really work for me — so far since attending your class I've lost 22 pounds and intend to lose more . . ."
Mrs. M. S. (school teacher): "The ability to relax through self-hypnosis has aided me tremendously . . ."
Mrs. D. E. (salesperson): "Motivation is the key to success in selling, since your seminar my sales have increased dramatically — I still can't believe it was so easy . . ."
Miss L. T. (nurse): "I feel like a new person since I've stopped smoking. I know now I will want to accomplish much more using self-hypnosis . . ."

8. All winners will be determined by a random draw from all valid entries.

HOW TO PLAY

Locked inside the "SUMMERFUNTHING" safe are many valuable prizes. Some of those prizes could be yours if you find the correct PASSWORD that opens the combination lock. It's an exciting game that's fun and easy to enter. The instructions on the dial give you the position of the letters in the "SUMMERFUNTHING" PASSWORD. All you have to do is find the first letter to start. For instance, suppose you started at the letter E and the instructions read 2nd LETTER — FOUR COUNTER CLOCKWISE. Count four spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter E and you arrive at the letter A. The next instruction reads 3rd LETTER — EIGHT COUNTER CLOCKWISE, so count off eight spaces in a counter-clockwise direction from the letter A and you arrive at the letter S. Finally the 4th letter. SIX CLOCKWISE means you count in a clockwise direction from the letter S and you arrive at the letter Y. In this example the PASSWORD is the word E-A-S-Y. To give you another clue and to add to the interest, each days password is scrambled and you will find it at the bottom of the illustration.

McLuhan's loss closes centre

TORONTO (CP) — Marshall McLuhan's Centre for Culture and Technology will be closed because it has no future without its ailing creator, the University of Toronto announced Tuesday.

University officials told a press conference that the 17-year-old centre will be replaced with the McLuhan program in culture and technology, a graduate program to include lectures and symposia.

McLuhan, 68, who rose to the status of a cult figure in the 1960s for his communication theories, suffered a serious stroke last fall and plans to retire June 30 after 34 years of being on the university's faculty and writing numerous books. He used the centre as his operating base.

"The centre could not continue in its present form in the absence of Marshall McLuhan," the university's school of graduate studies said in a statement.

McGill-Queen's press on brink of death

By ELLAN CATES

TORONTO (CP) — While Canadians debate ways to prop up national culture, scholars say one vital outlet for it soon may sink into oblivion.

The second-largest English-language publishers of scholarly books, McGill-Queen's University Press, is scheduled to end operations May 31, 1981. In an age of rising inflation and falling enrolment, principals of both universities have decided the press is something they can no longer afford.

The non-profit press, run jointly by McGill and Queen's universities, publishes about 20 titles a year chosen from 200 submitted annually from their own and other faculty. The universities became partners in 1969 when Queen's accepted the offer from McGill University Press, founded in 1960.

Donald Sutherland, director of McGill-Queen's Press, is hoping someone will come to the rescue but concedes this may be "a figment of my imagination."

"You hate to see a publishing house put on ice after it's taken 20 years to build this amount of flying speed," Sutherland said. "If no one takes our place there will be a serious flaw in Canadian publishing."

There is concern among Canadian scholars that this means about 20 important manuscripts a year will not be published.

Bernard Trotter, spokesman for Queen's Univerity, said the university felt the McGill-Queen's Press was too expensive.

"It was providing a service to the academic community in the whole of Canada, but if you don't have the money something has to give."

Queen's and McGill pay annual operating costs of $70,000 each and receive some government title grants, although Trotter said Queen's paid more than that to keep the press operating.

The press has already reduced its operating costs in recent years, cutting its staff to seven from 20 and closed its Kingston office.

John Main, vice-president of the Association of Canadian University Presses, said the association has sent the principals of McGill and Queen's a letter expressing deep concern about suspending the future operation of the press and urging them to reconsider.

Publication of scholarly articles is crucial to the career of an academic and often is the basis for promotion and tenure.

Not only academics benefit from the often arcane research published by a university press. Philip Cercone, director of Aid to Scholarly Publications for the federations of humanities and social sciences, said much of the detail that makes such authors as James Michener popular is gleaned from scholarly texts.

Without thriving university presses, such Canadian best-sellers as John Porter's The Vertical Mosaic would never have been published, Circone said.

"It was a work of original research and only 2,000 copies were published," Circone said. "Then all of a sudden it captured the public's imagination and now it's a basic textbook."

Most of the academics contacted doubted that another publishing concern would fill the void left by McGill-Queen's University Press.

"It's tragic," said Main. "There won't be anything to take its place. It's not possible that other publishers could take up the slack of 20 books a year. They are already over-committed and many are having similar financial troubles."

But Sutherland is hoping a phoenix will rise from the ashes of McGill-Queen's University Press. He is promoting a Canadian university press co-operative in which universities without presses would each chip in about $10,000 to operate a scholarly publishing centre.

However, Main said previous suggestions to create such a co-operative have foundered.

After-crop care for berry plants garden notes

After our strawberry plants have produced for us, it's always a temptation to move on to other plants in the garden and neglect the care of these berry plants that won't be "performing" for us again until later in the summer in the case of the June-bearing varieties. But the fact is the care you give them during the post-producing period will affect their production next season.

The strawberry bed must be kept moist — not soggy but moist in the top 12 inches (30 cm) of soil — because the strawberry roots are shallow. The soil must be kept lightly cultivated and if the bed is mulched, the mulch must be scratched up from time to time to prevent it from matting and keeping air from the roots.

This is also the time to monitor the production of runners. If your plants are in rows four feet apart, then you will be able to choose runners and pin them down in between the rows to create new plants in an orderly fashion.

As a rule, many runners must be discarded to avoid overcrowding. In this way you can keep your strawberry patch forever renewed by digging out old rows that are starting to produce less and replacing them with runners from the alternate rows.

After berry-picking time, when you have re-organized the patch, you might like, depending on your particular soil needs, to apply a little fertilizer to help restore the strength of the patch and build up the plants for their next producing season.

I'd suggest you apply the fertilizer close to the plants but keep it off the foliage, and water it in well. I'd take care not to fertilize too late in the season because if the plants go into the winter all lush with tender new growth then they will be more vulnerable to winter injury should we experience an abnormally cold winter. This warning applies equally to raspberry plants.

After the raspberry crop has been harvested is the period which is the most crucial for these plants as well. The canes which bore fruit this year must be cut down at ground level and burned and this is a job which should be done immediately harvesting ends. Any obviously weak canes can be taken out at this time but the final thinning of new canes should be delayed until the following spring.

It's easy to spot the old canes as they appear dried compared with the current year's new, green wood. This thinning of the canes allows them to harden off properly and thus enables them to survive the winter better.

Raspberries are more likely to need some spraying than strawberries and a watch should be kept for insects, especially for spider mites, which cause drying and browning of the leaves.

If you find that you have to move your raspberry rows for any reason, or if you want to start a raspberry patch, I'd advise you to wait until next spring as early as possible, prior to the canes leafing out. Raspberries can be transplanted successfully in the fall but it's actually safer in the spring.

The main problem with spring transplanting — and the factor which prompts many people to take a chance on fall operation — is that you can't really expect to get a good crop of berries a few months later because the plants are simply too busy making new roots and pushing up new canes.

However, you can prepare the new site this fall by digging in plenty of old rotted manure and compost. Start now by digging in kitchen vegetable waste. In the spring, the raspberry plants are set 30 inches (76 cm) apart in the row and about four inches (10 cm) deeper than they were in the original site. Once planted, cut down the canes to within six inches (5 cm) of the ground.

To conserve soil moisture, so important to the performance of these plants, maintain a good thick mulch over the roots. Rotted sawdust is highly recommended. Remember that raspberries are shallow rooters, so great caution must be exercised in cultivating around them.

Battle for control of CKVU

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three of the six original owners of television station CKVU have complained to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission that secret financial deals affected control of the station.

Among those battling for control are a former Liberal senator, a former leader of the Manitoba Liberal party and a cousin of B.C.'s lieutenant-governor Henry Bell-Irving.

Interventions filed with the commission, which is hearing a licence renewal application for the station, show a major purchase of CKVU shares was made last year by Dr. Charles Allard, owner of Edmonton TV station CITV.

CKVU president Daryl Duke, vice-president Norman Klenman and director Gordon Lyall responded by buying more shares for themselves and gained control of the station.

Other shareholders were concerned about the Duke group's $2 million purchase, including three original shareholders, Bill Bellman, former senator John Nichol and D.H. Bell-Irving.

"It became apparent to us that funds for those purchases were being provided or guaranteed by an interested third party, but we were unable to find out who," the trio says in an intervention.

The commission was told the purchase was funded through an agreement involving CanWest Communications Corp. and CanWest Capital Corp. of Winnipeg.

CanWest Communications owns controlling interest in Global Communications which in turn is a holding company for the Global Television network. Chairman of the board is Israel (Izzy) Asper, tax expert and former leader of the Manitoba Liberal party.

Allard and the dissident CKVU shareholders say this arrangement gives Asper control of the station, but Asper says it doesn't.

"Effective control has passed to an outsider who until recently held no apparent interest in the company and was never part of the group of shareholders approved by the commission in the granting of the licence," they said.

Allard's company, Allarco Broadcasting Ltd. has also filed an intervention charging that Duke, Lyall and Klenman violated the terms of the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The intervention asks the CRTC to determine whether Duke, Lyall and Klenman should be disqualified from holding directorship and office in Western Approaches Ltd., which owns CKVU and whether CanWest Capital and CanWest Communications should be disqualified from having any control over Western Approaches.

It also asks that the CanWest agreement be set aside on the grounds it is improper and unauthorized.

The trio says the CanWest agreement was hidden from them until last month, "even though the future of the company, its responsibilities under its licence and its earnings are all significantly influenced by these secret agreements."

Asper has also filed an intervention in which he says his company's deal is simply a financing arrangement and does not give CanWest directors direct or indirect control of the station.

Fisheries Act ruling greeted with anger

Environmental spokesmen have reacted with anger and bitterness to a Supreme Court of Canada ruling Tuesday against a section of the Fisheries Act which restricts logging activities.

The court ruled in an unanimous judgment Tuesday that the section of the legislation — which places a blanket prohibition on logging operations in waters frequented by fish — is beyond the powers of Parliament.

The judgment said Parliament had intruded onto provincial jurisdiction contrary to the British North America Act, the country's constitution.

Eve Howden, a Victoria spokesman for the Sierra Club of B.C. said today the decision by the court is the worst setback fisheries protection has suffered since the new fisheries act was proclaimed.

"It's a sad case indeed when the courts continue to refuse to support legislative protection for our natural resources and environment in general," Howden said.

Howard English, fisheries advisor for the B.C. Wildlife Federation, said that the province has lost half its salmon production, in great part due to the impact of industries such as logging.

"Fish production doesn't receive adequate protection from the detrimental impact of other industries," English said.

The decision, he added, is just another indication of the federal and provincial governments' inability to sort out questions of jurisdiction.

"Fisheries comes under federal jurisdiction, logging comes under provincial jurisdiction and the resources suffer," English said.

But Forests Minister Tom Waterland hailed the court ruling is a good decision because it forces recognition of more than one resource value.

And Don Lanskail, president of the Council of Forest Industries, which helped pay for Fowler's appeal, said he hopes the real benefit of the judgment will arise in the form of an opportunity to discuss and negotiate sensibly regulations and guidelines so that logging and fishing can co-exist in a positive atmosphere.

Fisheries spokesmen say the decision is another blow to an already floundering industry which needs legislation to encourage the forest industry to minimize debris.

However, forest industry officials have said it is virtually impossible to log in B.C. without violating the contended section of the legislation.

In making the ruling, the court erased a conviction against Dan Fowler who was charged with unlawfully putting debris into waters at or near B.C.'s Forbes Bay, while engaged in logging.

A verdict of guilty was imposed by a County Court judge. The B.C. Court of Appeal agreed he was guilty.

Government lawyers argued in the Supreme Court that the section of the Fisheries Act was necessary as preventive legislation intended for the federal duty to preserve and protect fish.

They said that its validity did not depend on showing that the operations to which it related caused actual harm to a fishery.

Mr. Justice Ronald Martland, writing reasons for the Supreme Court, said the section covered a wide field of logging activities and the amount of substance deposited in the water didn't matter.

Richard Long with heady commercial

No headway in bare market

VANCOUVER (CP) — Richard Long just can't seem to get a head.

He's looking for a few "Grade-A baldies" willing to turn their hairless expanses into human billboards, but he's not having much luck.

The idea is simple. Long wants to recruit bald men who will allow him to silkscreen an advertisement on their heads for two weeks. Long will then hustle the space to advertisers.

The baldies get $150 each and Long gets whatever the market will bear.

There's no standing around street corners or walking up and down sidewalks. Once festooned with the commercial message, the men go about their business as usual.

But so far only two men who have answered Long's newspaper ads have agreed with the plan. If more willing baldies don't show up soon, Long's company will be in trouble.

"I don't know what the problem is," he said. "I guess bald men in Vancouver don't have much commitment. They could even wear hats."

Many of the men who have called so far assumed he was looking for people to model toupees, Long said. The rest thought he was crazy.

"Some I even had to turn down because they had too much hair."

Long isn't fooling himself that his heady advertising scheme will be a long-term business. "It's a novelty. I can only see it lasting for a year, then on to stomachs, arms . . .

$150M a mile for link?

A 19-kilometre floating bridge linking Vancouver Island with the mainland could be built for between $100 million and $150 million a mile, Science Minister Pat McGeer said Tuesday.

McGeer, who is awaiting a study on the feasibility of such a structure, said he was encouraged by the engineering data he saw during a trip last week to the Seattle area where a floating bridge is being constructed across Hood Canal.

The initial structure — designed by highways ministry engineers — was destroyed by a severe storm two years ago and is being replaced by a new structure estimated to cost about $100 million a mile, McGeer said.

"I don't know that we could duplicate as cheaply something across the Strait of Georgia but I would think maybe not as much as $150 million a mile," McGeer said.

"Then we have to do approaches on either side, so that the total cost would certainly be more than a billion dollars, but it would be, if this kind of structure is built, far less than the $3 to $5 billion some people have been talking about."

McGeer said the Hood Canal gap is much shorter than the distance across Georgia Strait, but the distance in which a wind storm could build up is similar giving engineers a good idea of what sort of wave conditions might be faced.

A final report of the government's $100,000 pre-feasibility study into a transportation link across Georgia Strait is expected at the end of the month.

Meanwhile, McGeer said he thinks the most attractive route across the strait would be one from Steveston, south of Richmond, to Valdes Island near Nanaimo.

A highway would then carry traffic to the northern tip of the uninhabited island, connect by bridge to the southern part of Gabriola Island and then across to Vancouver Island just south of Nanaimo by way of two small bridges.

McGeer said he thinks Gabriola Island residents — who have voiced objections to any changes to their scenic retreat — would find such a plan more attractive than to have part of the island blacktopped for an enormous ferry terminal.

Gabriola has been suggested as a likely site for a ferry terminal .

Death toll climbs in S. Africa riots

Burning roadblock halts motorist in Cape Town's black township of Manenberg

Times News Services

CAPE TOWN — Police armed with "shoot to kill" orders moved into riot-torn townships today to disperse youths stoning cars and burning shops in South Africa's worst racial outbreaks since 1976.

To back up the action, authorities rushed two planeloads of riot police from other regions to help quell the violence as it entered its second day.

The newspaper Cape Argus quoted hospital sources as reporting 36 dead and 200 wounded in Tuesday's riots.

Police Minister Louis le Grange placed the official toll at 11 dead, but the national news agency said this figure did not include three people who later died of wounds.

Le Grange blamed the riots on "violent hooligans" and chief aide, Gen. Mike Geldenhuys, gave orders to shoot to kill looters and arsonists.

"We are no longer dealing with school, meat or bus boycotters," Le Grange said. "We are concerned now with criminal violence, hooligan elements, and we will act relentlessly against them."

Violence broke out anew at mid-morning in two mixed-race townships as firefighters battled blazes that had burned out of control through the night.

Youths gathering in the streets stoned passing cars and shops that opened for business. At least two stores went up in flames before police restored calm with gunfire and tear-gas without causing new casualties.

The road to Cape Town's D. F. Malan Airport was strewn with burning tires, makeshift wooden barricades and rocks as bands of youths stoned passing motorists.

The South African Press Association (SAPA), quoting the Afrikaans-language newspaper Die Burger, said at least eight persons were killed and about 50 wounded in clashes with police in the mixed-race townships. But SAPA said an official source told the Cape Times "that he believed well over 15 people had died in the shooting in a number of separate incidents."

SAPA, the country's domestic news agency, said all official channels to sources of information about the number of people killed or wounded in the unrest were later closed off to the press on police instructions. The police directorate issued a ban Monday night on journalists entering "troubled" areas without special police permission.

Meanwhile, the Dutch parliament, defying the government, today voted overwhelmingly in favor of a unilateral oil boycott of South Africa because of that nation's apartheid policy.

Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw said an oil embargo would harm South Africa's black majority.

Police serve strike notice as prod — not ultimatum

By MIKE HUGHES

Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt policemen today served 72-hour strike notice.

However, a police spokesman said the move was more of a prod to get negotiations going again rather than an indication of an imminent walkout.

Provincial mediator Bob Almgren is still involved in the contract dispute and the Labor Code prohibits any strike action until he withdraws.

The 72-hour notice follows strike votes Tuesday. Policemen from the three forces voted by more than 90 per cent to walk off the job in support of their contract demands.

While issuing the strike notice, the policemen informed their respective municipal officials that emergency services will be maintained at all times.

Although the 115 members of the Saanich force have been involved in the overall negotiations, they are not included in the strike notice because they are covered by a collective agreement until Dec. 31.

Contracts for the other policemen expired at the end of 1979.

The four forces are negotiating for the first time this year with the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association rather than with their own police boards.

After talks broke down at one stage, the B.C. Federation of Labor agreed to have three members of its staff work with the policemen.

Federation secretary Dave MacIntyre, who has been acting as chief negotiator, said today the strike vote is a clear indication of the policemen's displeasure with the manner in which negotiations with the GVLRA have been conducted.

He said he hopes the strike notice will encourage the employer to sit down and settle an agreement through the free collective-bargaining process.

He said negotiations to date have been extremely frustrating:

"Very few items have been settled and of those items, some are provisions which were in past collective agreements."

Man dead in cell

A 43-year-old man died overnight in the city police station drunk tank.

His body was found at 5 a.m. today when a jailer went to release him.

The dead man's identity is being withheld until next of kin are located.

The man, described by police as a regular, was found unconscious on the Yates Street parkade's fourth floor around 5 p.m. Tuesday.

He was taken to Victoria General Hospital and admitted around 5:30 p.m.

Police lab reports indicate the man had a blood alcohol level of .255 as well as some barbiturates in his system.

At 8:30 p.m., a hospital official phoned police who picked up the man who was able to walk but was still intoxicated .

Police said he was placed in the drunk tank with two other persons shortly before 9 p.m.

The cells were checked regularly through the night but by 5 a.m. the man had died.

Insp. Doug Grant said nothing is known about the dead man's background.

Ferry to take bicycles

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Changes are being made to permit bicycles aboard the Victoria Princess ferry to Seattle, B.C. Steamship Co. manager David Price said today.

Local cyclists have complained the new ferry doesn't allow bicycles, while the old Princess Marguerite used to carry hundreds of bikers back and forth every summer.

Price said bicycle racks are being built for the unused car deck on the Princess and special tickets should be ready in a few days.

It will cost a cyclist another $2 each way to take his machine to Seattle, on top of the regular $25 round trip fare.

He expects the first bicycles will be aboard the Victoria Princess early next week. One problem remains — separating foot passengers from bicycles in the congested dockside boarding areas at Victoria and Seattle.

Price wonders how foot passengers and cyclists will mix when getting off the ferry.

"There may be a few banged shins," he said.

One of the reasons B.C. Steamship hasn't been able to carry bicycles before now is congestion.

The company has something new to deal with this year, simultaneous disembarkation and boarding of passengers within a half-hour turnaround time, and the congestion is considerable.

Bicycles couldn't be carried from the Victoria end until now because there was only one facility to accommodate passengers waiting to board and it wasn't big enough.

A second temporary tent-like structure should be finished today, he said, allowing separation of tourists waiting to board for Seattle and those just arriving from the U.S. city.
